6478. Damage to third vessel.]—The steamer C. coming into St. Katharine's Docks, fell against two barges, & drove them against a vessel called the V., which was lying alongside the St. Katharine's Wharf; a skiff was between the V. & the wharf, & in such a position as not to be visible to those on board the C. By reason of the C. falling against the barges the V. was driven towards the wharf & crushed the skiff against the wharf. At the time of the collision the C. was within the prescribed limits within which the jurisdiction of the dock-master extended, & she was coming into dock under the direction of the dock-master. A cause of damage was instituted in the City of London Ct. on behalf of the owner of the skiff & the owners of her cargo against the owners of the C. to recover for the damage done to the skiff & her cargo:—Held: the accident might have been avoided if the master of the C. had taken proper precautions in entering the dock, & the C. must be condemned in the damage proceeded for.—THE CYNTHIA (1876), 2 P. The representatives of deceased having brought in the Admlty. PART XII. SECT. 5, SUB-SECT. 6.—F.

6480 1. Whether rule applicable—Action for negligence.]—Pltf. sustained personal injuries in a collision at sea that occurred between a schooner in his charge as pilot, & defts.' steamer. In an action in personam against defts., claiming damages in negligence of defts., the jury (inter alia) found that defts. were negligent in not getting out of the way of the schooner, or stopping; & assessed pltf.'s damages at £500. It was admitted that the schooner, which was being overtaken by the steamer, displayed no stern light, as required by Art. 10 of the Statutory Regulations. On a motion to set aside the verdict & judgment entered for pltf. for £500 at the trial:—Held: the Admiralty rule as to division of loss applied; & pltf. was only entitled to half the damage assessed by the jury.—BOUCHER v. CLYDE SHIPPING CO., [1904] 2 I. 6481. —— ——.]—A collision having occurred between two vessels, an agreement was made between the owners of the vessels that each was to blame & that "the damages rising therefrom ought to be borne equally by the owners of both." Subsequently the representatives of the seamen, who were drowned owing to the collision, on board of one of the vessels, made claims against the owners of the other vessel, & these claims were settled by the payment of a sum of money. The owners who paid the claims sought to recover one half thereof from the owners of the other vessel under the agreement:—Held: the sum so paid was not damage arising out of the collision, the representatives of the seamen could not have recovered against the owners of the vessel on which the seamen were serving, inasmuch as the collision was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant, & therefore one half of the sum so paid could not be recovered from the owners of that vessel.—THE GENERAL HAVELOCK, [1906] P. 3, n.; 21 T. L. R. 438.

6482. —— Payments by way of compensation apart from negligence—Under foreign law.]—As the result of a collision between a Spanish & a French ship on the high seas the Spanish vessel sank, & some members of her crew were drowned. At the usual reference following on an agreement equivalent to both to blame, a claim against the owners of the French ship by the owners of the Spanish ship under the Admlty. rule of division of loss, for a moiety of certain sums paid, under Spanish law, to the representatives of deceased seamen, was admitted:—Held: the claim must be disallowed, for it was in respect of a payment made by way of indemnity, under a foreign statute, independent of any question of negligence, it was not recognised by English law; & if it was a claim for damages for loss of life, it did not come within the scope of the Admlty. rule of division of loss.—THE CIRCE, [1906] P. 1; 74 L. 6483. —— —— —— Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 3.]—In a collision between Swedish & British steamships, for which both ships were held to blame, a seaman on the former vessel was drowned. Under Swedish law the Swedish shipowners paid compensation to the relatives of the seaman. At the reference to assess the collision damage the Swedish shipowners claimed to recover from the owners of the British vessel: (a) a moiety of the compensation so paid; & (b) a moiety of the survey fees incidental to the repair of the collision damage although in fact, those fees had been paid by the underwriters. The registrar allowed both items:—Held: (1) the decision of the Registrar as to (a) was wrong, for apart from the Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), the Ct. of Admlty. has no jurisdiction to entertain an action in rem for loss of life, & the Admlty. rules as to division of loss have no application to such a claim, & Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 3, which provides for contribution between the owners of wrongdoing vessels in respect of (inter alia) damages for loss of life or personal injuries, only applies to damages recoverable by action & not to claims for compensation arising out of some statute & independently of fault on the part of the shipowner; (2) as to (b) the survey fees were an indispensable part of the cost of repairs, & it was immaterial that they were paid by the underwriters & not by the owners, for the doctrine of subrogation applied.—THE MOLIÈRE, [1925] P. 27; 94 L. 6484. —— Capitalised value of pensions—Compassionate allowance.]—One of H.M. submarines was run into & sunk by a steamship & the crew were drowned. In an action for damage by collision brought by the Comrs. for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom against the owners of the steamship, defts. submitted to judgment on the basis of paying to pltfs. 95 per cent. of their damage to be assessed by the Admlty. registrar. Pltfs. claimed as an item of damage the capitalised amount of the pensions payable by them to the relatives of deceased men:—Held: the claim failed (a) on the principle of Baker v. Bolton (1808), 1 Camp. 493, that in a civil ct. the death of a human being could not be complained of as an injury; (b) on the ground of remoteness, the pensions being voluntary payments in the nature of compassionate allowances.—ADMIRALTY COMRS. v. 6485. —— Liability for loss of life governed by foreign law.]—As the result of a collision between the French steamship Y. O. & the British steamship C., the Y. O. sank & several of her crew were drowned. Both vessels were held to blame for the collision in equal degrees. The owners of the Y. O. proved their damages in the registry. Meanwhile representatives of deceased members of the crew of the Y. O. had begun actions in the K. B. Div. against the owners of the C. who admitted liability. Pending the ascertainment of these damages by a sheriff's jury, the owners of the C. applied by motion (a) for an order that they might be allowed to pay into ct. the amount of the damages found by the registrar to be due to the owners of the Y. O.; & (b) for a declaration that under the Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), they were entitled to deduct from that sum half the amount they would have to pay in respect of the life claims. It was admitted that the liability of the owner of the Y. O. in respect of the loss of life on his vessel was governed by French law & the ct. found that according to French law the owner of the Y. O. would not be liable if sued by the representatives of deceased members of the crew:—Held: (1) as under the provisos to Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), ss. 1, 3, these sects. were not to be construed as imposing any liability upon any person who was exempted by any provision of law or who for any reason was not liable to be sued, the owners of the C., when they paid the damages awarded in respect of the loss of life would have no right of contribution from the owner of the Y. O., & the motion must be dismissed; (2) even if the case had been governed by English law the same result would follow, as the defence of common employment would have been open to the owner of the Y. O.—THE CEDRIC, [1920] P. 193; 89

There are about six thousand freemen & apprentices. The owner of a barge hired two qualified persons to navigate it within the limits; &, by their negligent management of the barge, another vessel was injured:—Held: the owner of the barge was liable to a civil action for the mischief, & it made no difference whether the navigators were hired for the job or by time.—MARTIN v. TEMPERLEY (1843), 4 Q. 6500. —— Non-observance of navigation rules.]—THE SEINE, No. 6084, ante.

6501. —— Sufficiency of allegation of negligence.]—The obligation to manage a navigable vessel properly attaches to the possession of the vessel, & ceases as soon as the possession of the vessel is innocently & wholly parted with.

A declaration stated that before the happening of the damage complained of, to wit, on, etc., a certain barge of deft.. & of which he was then in possession, etc., sunk & went to the bottom in a certain navigable river, etc., & that the barge, being so sunk, lay concealed under the water in such a manner that vessels passing over the place where it lay would necessarily strike against the same; & that deft. had notice of the premises; & "that it thereupon became & was the duty of deft. while the barge continued so sunk, to take & use due & proper care" to prevent danger to vessels navigating that part of the river by giving due notice of the danger by buoy or other signal; & assigned for a breach the neglect to give such notice, or use such means to prevent danger, by reason of which pltf.'s vessel sustained a damage by striking against the barge:—Held: the declaration disclosed no obligation upon the part of deft. to give such notice or use such means to prevent danger as suggested.

It is the duty of a person using a public navigable river with a vessel of which he is possessed, & has the control & management, to use reasonable skill & care to prevent mischief to other vessels; & in case of a collision arising from his negligence, he must sustain without compensation the damages occasioned to his own vessel, & is liable to pay compensation for that sustained by another, navigated with due skill & care; & this liability is the same, whether his vessel is in motion or stationary, floating or aground, under water or above it (MAULE, J.).—BROWN v. MALLETT (1848), 5 C. B. 599; 17 L. J. C. P. 227; 11 L. T. O. S. 64; 12 Jur. 204; 136 E. R. 1013.

6504. —— Sunken vessel—Instructions to harbour master to light wreck—Collision before action by harbour master.]—The D. in consequence of the sole default of her master & crew had sunk in the Thames, & had become a wreck obstructing the navigation of the river. Her mate sent a message to the harbour-master at G. to inform him of the accident, who said that he would cause the wreck to be lighted. A few hours afterwards, the wreck not having been lighted, a vessel without any fault on the part of those on board her, came into collision with the wreck & sustained damage. An action of damage having been instituted on behalf of the owner of the damaged vessel against the owners of the D., the judge at the trial refused to admit the evidence showing that the mate of the D. had sent a message to the harbour master, & that the latter had promised to light the wreck:—Held: the evidence was wrongly rejected, the collision had not been caused by the negligence of the owners of the wreck, & they were not liable for the damage done.—THE DOUGLAS (1882), 7 P. Plea, that defts. had not the possession & care, etc., by their servants & mariners, or otherwise. Defts., being owners of the steam vessel, chartered her to D., for six months, at £20 per week, the owners to keep her in good & sufficient order for the conveyance of goods, etc., to & from Newcastle & Goole, or any other coasting station which D. might employ her in: D. to pay all disbursements, including harbour dues, pilotages, seamen's & captain's wages, & coals, oils, tallow, etc., for engines, & to insure the vessel; the policy to be deposited with the owners:—Held: the issue ought to be found for pltf. upon the interpretation of the charterparty alone. A fortiori, upon proof, in addition, that D. had no power to appoint or dismiss the officers & crew, & did not interfere in the arrangements of the ship.—FENTON v. CITY OF DUBLIN STEAM PACKET CO. 6507. —— Transport employed by government—Acting under orders of naval officer.]—Pltf. & deft. had each a vessel chartered & used by govt. as a transport for troops in a war expedition, & were each towed by different steamers, commanded by officers in Her Majesty's navy, to whose orders the masters of the transports were respectively subject. The steamers anchored near each other, but the officer commanding the steamer which had defts.' vessel in tow ordered the master of it to hang on as long as possible without anchoring. He accordingly hung on without anchoring, but the wind changing in the night, & becoming squally, deft.'s vessel swung round, & came in collision with pltf.'s vessel, which accident would not have occurred had deft.'s vessel anchored when the wind began to change. In an action against deft. for this collision, the judge left it to the jury to say whether there had been negligence or want of good seamanship on the part of deft. in not anchoring after the change of circumstances which had occurred after the order had been given by the officer commanding the steamer:—Held: the direction was right, as the order was not an absolute one, but applied only to the then existing state of circumstances. Semble: obedience to the positive order of the officer in command of the steamer would have been a justification, & deft. would not have been liable to pltf. for any damage done to his vessel in consequence of obeying such order.—HODGKINSON v. FERNIE (1857), 2 C. 6513. Depends on which has control.]—The steamship A. found at a foreign port the S., a screw steamship, totally disabled in her machinery; both vessels belonged to same owner. The captain of the A., to protect his employers' interest & earn salvage from the owners of the cargo of S., took the S. in tow, & towed her into the English Channel, & whilst so doing came into collision with a sailing ship close hauled on the starboard tack. The damage done by the A. caused the sailing ship to sink, but before she sank the S. ranged up alongside of her & came into contact with her. The A. first saw the green light of the ship at a distance of three-quarters of a mile, & then, instead of slackening speed or starboarding her helm, attempted to cross the bows of the ship. The ship saw at two miles' distance the A. & S., with a great length of hawser between them, & the red lights of both, & kept her course:—Held: (1) the A. was to blame for the collision having regard to the exceptional circumstances under which the towing was undertaken, the governing as well as the motive power being wholly with the A., the S. was not liable to be condemned in damages occasioned by the collision; (2) the S. cannot be deemed, in intendment of law, to be one vessel with the A., or liable for her negligence.

towing a ship & another ship, the question whether the tow is liable to make good damage done by the negligence of the tug, depends upon the determination of the question whether the "governing power" is in the tug or in the tow. If the tug is in the service of & under the orders of the tow, the tow is answerable for the negligence of the tug as for the negligence of a servant; but if the tug is, although rendering service to the tow, not under the control of the latter, but is itself the governing power, then the tow is not liable for the negligence of the tug.—UNION S.S. 6516. Depends on existence of relation of master & servant—Question of fact.]—No general rule can be laid down as to the liability of a vessel in tow for a collision between it & a third vessel occasioned by the negligence of those on board the tug. Whether the relation of master & servant exists between the owners of the vessel in tow & the crew of the tug, so as to make the former liable, depends upon the circumstances of each case.

No doubt in many cases of tonage the negligence relied on as making the owners of the vessel in tow liable for a collision has been the negligence of those on board the tug. . . . However, the real question is whether or not the relation of master & servant exists between defts., the owners of the vessel towed, & the persons in charge of the navigation of the steam tug. Unless that relation exists, considerations of expediency cannot avail to impose liability on the owners of the vessel in tow (BUTT, J.).—THE QUICKSTEP (1890), 15 P. D. 196; 59 L. J. P. 65; 63 L. Having failed to get the E. the master brought the L. a steam tug considerably less powerful than the E. While being towed up by the L. the O. W. came into collision with, & damaged another vessel anchored in the river. The collision arose from an improper handling of the vessels by the pilot, having regard to the motive power of the L. & the state of the wind & tide:—Held: under these circumstances, the owners of the O. W. were free from liability. Secus: had negligence by the master in the selection of the steam tug L. shown to have been wholly or in part the cause of the collision.—MARSHALL v. MORAN, THE OCEAN WAVE (1870), L. The Ticonderoga alleged that she was not liable for the damage done, as her charterparty obliged her to obey orders & put herself in tow of the steamer:—Held: such obligation was no compulsion, so as to lay the ground for exemption from liability for the damage done; as it arose from a voluntary stipulation entered into by the owners themselves.

By the maritime law there is a right of proceeding in rem against the vessel doing the damage, which cannot be taken away by any voluntary contract of the owners with a third party.—THE TICONDEROGA (1857), Sw. 215; 166 E. R. 1103.

In a collision action the G. was found to be in fault, & as the owners of the R. were also owners of the G., judgment was given against the owners of the R. The owners of tug & tow brought an action to limit their liability under 1894 Act, s. 503, to £8 a ton on the tonnage of the G. The judge limited the liability to that tonnage. On appeal by defts. it was admitted that there was no personal negligence by any one on board the R., & that the control of the navigation of the R. & the G. was upon the G.:—Held: (1) the judgment in the collision action should have been given against the R.; (2) the navigation of the G. controlled the navigation of the R., & the R. was improperly navigated by the servants of the owners of the R.; (3) it did not matter whether the servants of the owners who navigated improperly were on the R. or the G., &, allowing the appeal in the collision action, liability should

An application for directions under R. S. C., Ord. 16, r. 21, was subsequently made, & pltfs. thereupon asked that the third parties should be dismissed from the action on the ground that pltfs. would be embarrassed by the proceedings between defts. & the third parties:—Held: the third parties must be dismissed, as under the circumstances questions would probably arise between them & defts. by which pltfs. might be embarrassed, as they were different from those upon which the action between pltfs. & defts. would turn.—THE BIANCA (1883), 8 P. 6542. —— —— ——.]—Cargo owners instructed barge owners to lighter their goods, &, as time pressed, to employ a tug. The tug was so negligently navigated by the servants of the tug owners that the barge containing the goods was brought into collision with another barge, & the goods thereby damaged. In an action by the cargo owners, as pltfs., against the barge owners & the tug owners as co-defts., the barge owners were dismissed from the suit with costs to be paid by the cargo owners, but the tug owners were held liable with costs for the damage sustained by the cargo owners, together with the costs to be paid by the cargo owners to the barge owners. The tug owners, by a third-party notice, served on the barge owners, set up a contract of indemnity under which their customers agreed that the tug owners should "not be answerable for any loss or damage which might happen to, or be occasioned by, any barge, or its cargo, while in tow, however such loss or damage might arise," & undertook to hold them harmless & indemnify them "from any such loss or damage, & against the faults or defaults of their servants or any claim therefor by whomsoever made." Under the issue raised between co-defts. by the third-party notice, the barge owners were adjudged responsible for the amount of the damage for which the tug owners had been held liable together with the two sets of costs. Both defts. served notices of appeal; but the appeal of the tug owners was subsequently withdrawn:—Held: there was no privity of contract between pltfs., the owners of the damaged cargo, & the tug owners, which would bind pltfs. to the conditions attached to the towage, &, therefore, on the construction of the contract of indemnity as between the barge owners & the tug owners, the barge owners not only could not bring an action against the tug owners for any loss or damage which might happen to, or be occasioned by, any barge or its cargo, while in tow, but the contract assumed an existing liability against which the barge owners had undertaken to indemnify the tug owners, so that the barge owners were liable for the damages recovered by pltfs. in the action brought against the tug owners, together with the costs reasonably incurred by the tug owners in defending such action, including the costs which pltfs. had been adjudged to pay the barge owners, & which the tug owners had been ordered to repay to pltfs.—THE MILLWALL, [1905] P. 155; 74 L. The tug owners brought in the owners of the barge as third parties, &, in respect of any sum to which they (the tug owners) might be liable to the cargo owners, claimed a declaration that they were entitled to be indemnified by the barge owners under the terms of a "towage requisition" by which the tug owners (the Manchester Ship Canal Co.) were "not to be responsible or liable for damage or injury to any ship, vessel or craft, or the persons or goods on board any ship, vessel or craft, of which the co. may undertake the towage or docking in the river Mersey, the Manchester Ship Canal & the Bridgewater Canals, or which may be piloted by any of their servants to or from any place in the river Mersey, the said Ship Canal & the said Bridgewater Canals, or for any loss sustained or liability incurred by any one by reason of such damage or injury, or for any loss or liability incurred in consequence of any such ship, vessel or craft colliding with or otherwise damaging any other vessel or thing, or for any loss or liability of any kind whatsoever arising from the towing, docking or piloting, whatever may be the cause or causes of such damage, injury, loss or liability, or under whatever circumstances such damage, injury, loss or liability may have happened or accrued, even though arising from or occasioned by the act, omission, incapacity, negligence or default, whether wilful or not, of the co.'s servants or agents or any other persons, or any defect, imperfection, or insufficiency of power in or any delay, stoppage or slackness of speed of any tug or vessel, her machinery or equipment engaged in towing or docking any ship, vessel or craft, whether such defect, imperfection or insufficiency of power be in existence at the beginning of or during the said towing or docking." On the hearing of the issue as between the tug owners & the barge owners:—Held: the third parties, the owners of the barge, were entitled to be dismissed from the action with costs, as no such liability by the third parties, namely, the owners of the barge, to indemnify the owners of the tug, could be implied from the terms of the towage requisition.—THE DEVONSHIRE & THE ST. The owners of the steamship brought an action against the owners of the tug & the owners of the barge. The tug was found alone to blame, & judgment was entered against present pltfs. for damages to be assessed & costs. Pltfs. claimed to be indemnified by defts. against these damages & costs in virtue of the terms of the contract under which the barge was being towed, which provided (inter alia) that: "The tug owners will not be responsible for the acts of, or defaults of the master or crew of the tug or of any of their servants or agents . . . nor for any damages, injuries, losses, or delay from whatsoever cause arising, that may occur either to the vessel or vessels towed . . . or to any other ship or vessel . . . & the tug owners shall be held harmless & indemnified by the hirer against all damages, injuries, losses, & delay, & against all claims in respect thereof, even though the same be caused or have arisen directly or indirectly from any unseaworthiness, defects, . . . or otherwise howsoever":—Held: these terms covered an indemnity for damage or loss, even if caused by the negligence of pltfs.' servants, & pltfs. were entitled to the indemnity they claimed.—THE ADRIATIC (1915), 85 L. 6545. —— —— ——.]—The master of the Dutch fishing vessel L., who spoke very little English & could not read English at all, engaged the tug K. to tow his vessel from the mouth of the Humber to dock & from dock to sea for £15. He verbally agreed the terms with one of the partners of the firm owning the K. who wrote them down on a debit note form & the master signed it. The form contained a printed clause of condition of towage under which the owners of vessels towed undertook to indemnify the tug owners against all liability whatsoever & against all costs & charges in respect of any actions that might be brought against the tug owners in relation to loss or damage to any other ship through collision or otherwise. The master, though he knew he was signing a contract, was not aware that the printed conditions contained an indemnity clause. In the course of the towage the K. towed the L. into the F. & J., a vessel at anchor, whose owners sued both the K. & the L., & the K. was held alone to blame. In third party proceedings by the owners of the K. against the owners of the L. for an indemnity:—Held: the master of the L. was bound by the conditions of towage & had authority to bind his owners, & accordingly the owners of the K. were entitled to be indemnified by the owners of the L. against the damages assessed against the K. in the collision action, & the costs payable to the owners of the F. & J. in that action, & also against the K.'s own costs in that action.—THE LUNA, [1920] P. 22; 89 L. Pltfs. were a statutory authority in control of the docks where defts.' vessel was being towed, & they supplied all tugs for dock work & would not allow any one except themselves to do the work. A collision took place whilst the towage was in progress between pltfs.' tug & defts.' vessel, in which damage was caused to both vessels. Defts. counterclaimed for the damage to their vessel:—Held: the towage contract was valid & was not void as being against public policy; &, further, the effect of the contract was that even if the collision was solely caused by the negligent navigation of pltfs.' tug defts. were liable for the whole of the damage occasioned thereby.—THE PRESIDENT VAN BUREN (1924), 132 L. 6548. Abolition of compulsory pilotage as defence—Compulsory pilotage under orders under Defence of Realm Regulations.]—Pilotage Act, 1913 (c. 31), s. 15 (1), has not merely the effect of abolishing the defence of compulsory pilotage given under some public or local Act, but it applies also to the case of a pilot compulsorily taken on board a ship under orders issued under the Defence of the Realm Regulations, & the shipowners cannot in these circumstances avail themselves of the common law defence that they are not responsible for the negligent acts of a person who is not their servant.—THE CHYEBASSA, [1919] P. 201; 88 L. The collision was solely due to the fault of the pilot put on board defts.' vessel under the orders of the King's Harbour Master in order to shift her to another berth:—Held: (1) as Pilotage Act, 1913 (c. 31), did not extend expressly or by necessary implication to Gibraltar, & as, by the ordinary common law, if sued in Gibraltar defts. would not have been liable for the negligence of a pilot put on board their vessel by compulsion of law, the defence of compulsory pilotage succeeded; (2) the fact that the vessel was under the form of charterparty known as "T. 99," which contained a provision that "the Admlty. shall not be held responsible for losses sustained through the negligence of pilots . . . or others employed by them, the owners recognising them as their servants even if appointed & paid by the Admlty. . . ." did not make the pilot in fact the servant of the owners.—THE ARUM, [1921] P. 12; 90 L. 6553. "may, in accordance with the rules of ct.," extend the period to such extent & on such conditions as it thinks fit. By sect. 9, the Act is made applicable to any persons other than the owners responsible for the fault of the vessel.

On Jan. 18, 1915, a collision occurred in the North Sea between pltf.'s vessel, a Dutch Trawler, & H.M.S. Archer. Diplomatic correspondence ensued, & on July 14, 1916, the British Consul-General in Rotterdam informed pltf. that the Admlty. would not admit liability. Pltf. continued to make diplomatic representations, & on Feb. 21, 1918, was informed through the Dutch Minister that the Foreign Office could not reopen the matter.

On Oct. 21, 1918, an application was made ex parte to the judge in chambers for leave to commence proceedings against the officer commanding the Archer, notwithstanding that the period of two years had elapsed. The judge granted leave. Thereupon deft. applied to set aside the order on the grounds (a) that the ct. had no power to deal with the matter ex parte; (b) that no rules of ct. had been made under the Act, & therefore that the second part of above Act, s. 8, was inoperative; & (c) that if the Ct. had power to exercise its discretion, on the facts it ought not to have been exercised:—Held: (1) whether or not the application should have been dealt with ex parte, the ct. had power to review its order; (2) by virtue of the Act applied to actions brought against the responsible officer of a King's ship; (3) although there were no rules of ct. made under the Act the ct. had power to exercise its discretion under above Act, s. 8; (4) having regard to the delay in making the application after Feb. 21, the latest date on which it might be urged in pltf.'s favour that the case was still under consideration, the ct. ought not to exercise its discretion, & the order obtained ex parte must be set aside.—H.M.S. 6590. —— Collision of two negligent vessels causing damage to third.]—In an action of damage by collision both vessels were found to blame. The decree, in the usual form, condemned the owners of defts.' vessel & their bail in a moiety of pltfs.' claim in respect of the said damage, & the owners of pltfs.' vessel & their bail in a moiety of defts.' counterclaim in respect of the said damage. At the reference the registrar added to the moiety of pltfs.' claim, payable by defts., a moiety of the amount of damage recovered from pltfs. by the owners of a barge against which pltfs.' vessel was driven in consequence of the collision. Defts. appealed on the ground that, as pltfs. & defts. were joint tortfeasors, no contribution could be claimed from defts. in respect of the damage to the barge paid by pltfs.:—Held: the decree in Admlty. had been properly carried out by adding to the moiety of their damage claimed by pltfs. a moiety of the consequential damage recovered by the barge owner from pltfs., & it was not material that the damage arose out of a tort.—THE FRANKLAND, [1901] P. 161; 70 L. 6591. —— —— Separate & independent acts of negligence.]—By separate & independent acts of negligence on the part of each vessel a collision took place between the C. C. & the K. As a direct consequence of that collision, & without any intervening act of negligence, the C. C. ran into & sank pltfs.' vessel. Pltfs., having recovered judgment against the owners of the C. C., who limited their liability, brought an action against the owners of the K. in respect of the same damage:—Held: the causes of action were separate & distinct; accordingly the owners of the C. C. & the owners of the K. were not joint tortfeasors; & therefore, the judgment recovered against the owners of the C. C. was not a bar to pltfs.' action against the owners of the K.—THE KOURSK, [1924] P. 140; 93 L. J. P. 72; 131 L. T. 700; 40 T. L. R. 399; 68 Sol. Jo. 842; 16 Asp. M. L. C. 374, C. A.

6593. —— ——.]—A steamship came into collision with a tug, which was towing a barque. The owners of the steamship sued the tug & the barque for the sinking of the steamship, & the tug counterclaimed for the damage sustained by her. All three vessels were found to blame, & the decree condemned the owners of the tug & the owners of the barque in a moiety of the claim of the owners of the steamship, & condemned the owners of the steamship in a moiety of the counterclaim of the tug. At the reference these amounts were ascertained, & the owners of the barque applied for an order that, on payment to the owners of the steamship of the balance due to them on the respective moieties, the owners of the steamship should under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 5, execute an assignment of the judgment to them:—Held: the application must be refused as the owners of the barque & the owners of the tug were joint tortfeasors & not co-debtors liable for a debt or duty within 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97.—THE ENGLISHMAN & THE AUSTRALIA, [1895] P. 212; 64 L. 6594. —— ——.]—A Norwegian barque, whilst in tow of a tug in the Bristol Channel, came into collision with, & sank, a third vessel. Pltfs. owners of the third vessel, brought an action in rem against the owners of the barque & the owners of the tug. The owners of the barque having allowed judgment to go by default, the barque was sold by the marshal under a decree condemning that vessel in the amount of pltfs.' damage.

The action proceeded against the tug, & resulted in a decree pronouncing both pltfs.' vessel & the tug to blame, & condemning the owners of the tug 6598. Effect of Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 8—On limitation under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93).]—A claim against a vessel, or her owners, for damages for loss of life may, under Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 8, be brought within two years from the date when the loss was caused, notwithstanding the provisions of Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93), by which an action to recover damages for loss of life must be commenced within twelve calendar months after the death of deceased person.—THE CALIPH, [1912] P. 213 ; 82 L. 6601. Action against Crown servants—Application of Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (c. 61).]—Above Act applies to servants of the Crown acting within the scope of their public duties, & the Act is not impliedly repealed, as regards actions in respect of damage by collision, by Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 47), s. 8, which provides that no action shall be maintainable to enforce any claim against a vessel or her owners, or any other person responsible for the fault of the vessel in respect of any damage to another vessel unless the proceedings are commenced within two years.

Accordingly, actions against commissioned officers in charge of His Majesty's ships for damage by collision must be commenced within six months & not within the period of two years allowed by Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57).—THE DANUBE II., [1921] P. 183 ; 90 L. 6602. Issue of writ within two years—Res not within jurisdiction.]—It is not necessary that, at the time of the issue of a writ in rem, the res should be within the jurisdiction of the ct. ; & Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 8, which provides that in the case of collision or salvage actions the proceedings must be commenced within two years of the cause of action, is complied with if the writ is issued within two years ; the sect. does not contemplate that the arrest of the res constitutes the commencement of the proceedings.

In general, the ct. will not grant an extension of time for the renewal of an unserved writ, which has not been renewed within the period of one year as provided by R. S. C., Ord. 8, r. 1, if, but for the extension of time, the claim would be barred by a Statute of Limitations. But, inasmuch as Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 8, contains provisoes for extension of time unknown to any other Statutes of Limitation, the application to renew a writ in an action which comes within the operation of Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 8, must be considered on its merits, & if, under the circumstances, the ct. would give leave to issue a writ notwithstanding the lapse of two years, the ct. will allow an extension of time for the renewal of a writ, the time for the renewal of which has expired.—THE ESPANOLETO, [1920] P. 223 ; 90 L. 6604. Effect of decree of limitation of liability.]—A decree of limitation of liability under 1894 Act, ss. 503, 504, under which all claims against limitation fund are ordered to be brought in within a certain time, usually three months, does not override the provisions of Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 8, & rival claimants to the limitation fund are entitled to object, if more than two years have elapsed since the cause of action, to the claims of persons who have not commenced proceedings within the statutory period of two years provided for in Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57).

Generally speaking, however, if the cause for not issuing a writ in respect of the damage sustained has been the fact that limitation proceedings are pending, that would be sufficient ground for the exercise of the discretion vested in the ct. under Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), to extend the time for the issue of a writ notwithstanding that the period of two years has expired.—THE DISPERSER, [1920] P. 228; 89 L. 6607. —— Opportunity of arrest.]—On Sept. 15, 1916, a collision occurred between the steamship P. H. & the steamship C. In an action by the owners of the P. H. against the owners of the C. the latter pleaded that the fault was that of the C. &/or in the alternative, of the steamship P. L. M. 8, then called the V.; & in a separate action the owners of the C. sued the owners of the V. The two actions were tried in Mar. 1920, & the ct. found in both actions that the fault was solely that of the V. Thereupon the owners of the P. H. issued a writ against the owners of the P. L. M. 8, the V., to recover the amount of the damage sustained in the collision with the C. The owners of the P. L. M. 8 moved to set aside the writ on the ground that, more than two years having elapsed since the date of the collision, under Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 8, the action was not maintainable.—Held: as the owners of the P. H. were aware that the owners of the C. blamed the P. L. M. 8, & there had been ample opportunity within the two years of arresting her & joining her as a deft., the discretion vested in the ct. under Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 8, to extend the time ought not to be exercised in pltfs.' favour; & the action declared not maintainable.—THE P. From Mar. 25 to Apr. 4, 1919, she was within the jurisdiction at Barry Roads, but not again till Feb. 1920. Pltfs. obtained leave on an ex parte application to issue a writ in Mar. 1920. Defts. now moved to have the writ set aside. Pltfs. denied & defts. affirmed that the period from Mar. 25 to Apr. 4, 1919, had provided " a reasonable opportunity of arresting " the L. L. within Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 8:—Held: there could have been no effective arrest of the vessel while she was under requisition, & the period alleged did not constitute a " reasonable opportunity " within Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 8.—THE LARGO LAW (1920), 123 L. 6611. —— No knowledge of exact circumstances of damage.]—Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 8, which provides that no action shall be maintainable to enforce any claim against a vessel or her owners in respect of (inter alia) damages for loss of life unless proceedings are commenced within two years from the date when the loss was caused, gives defts. rights which should not without good reason be set aside under the proviso in the sect. that the ct. may extend the period to such extent & on such terms as it thinks fit. The mere fact that plft. did not know that he had a cause of action is not sufficient reason for interfering with the operation of the statutory limitation. Pltf. was the mother of an American soldier who was drowned at sea on Oct. 6, 1918, as the result of a collision between defts.' steamship & the transport in which he was being carried. Pltf. knew that her son had been drowned, but was unaware until the summer of 1922 of the precise circumstances under which the loss occurred or that she had a legal right of action against defts., who had been held partly to blame for the collision. Her writ was issued in Dec. 1922:—Held: the reason for the delay in issuing the writ was insufficient for the exercise of the ct.'s discretion to extend the time, & that accordingly the action was not maintainable.—THE KASHMIR, [1923] P. 85; 92 L. ### SUB-SECT. 5.—MEASURE OF

A. In General.

6613. Full amount of damage—From ship in default.]—Term compensation is not very accu-

PART XII. SECT. 6, SUB-SECT. 5.—A.

6613 i. Full amount of damage—From ship in default.]—The fundamental principle in determining the measure of damages in all these cases of collision is that the party to blame is considered a wrong-doer, & the party injured is entitled to restitutio in integrum, to full & complete indemnity for all the rately applied to any restitution that falls short of a fair & full indemnification.

The ancient general law exacted a full compensation out of all the property of the owners of the guilty ship, upon the common principle applying to persons undertaking the conveyance of goods, that they were answerable for the conduct of the persons whom they employed, & of whom the other parties who suffered damage knew nothing, & over whom they had no control (LORD STOWELL). —THE DUNDEE (1823), 1 Hag. Adm. 109; cited in 4 L. J. O. S. K. B. at p. 150; 166 E. R. 39; subsequent proceedings (1827), 2 Hag. Adm. 137.

6614. —— —— Though other concurrent cause.]—A successful pltf. in a cause of damage is entitled to be reimbursed by deft. to the extent, but only to the full extent, of the damage occasioned.

The burden of proving the damage done lies in the first instance upon pltf., but it is for deft. to show that, notwithstanding primâ facie evidence to the contrary, there was another & concurrent cause to which the damage may be attributed.

If a portion only of the damage is clearly attributable to the wrongdoer, & that portion cannot be distinguished from the rest, the wrongdoer is responsible for the whole damage.

Even though the injured vessel may have been at the time of collision in such a condition that the collision occasioned an unusual amount of damage, a wrongdoer is nevertheless responsible for all the consequences.

A schooner, having previously encountered severe weather, put into Gibraltar, & while at anchor there was injured by a steamer. The steamer being to blame for the collision, the registrar & merchants, considering it probable that the subsequent condition of the vessel was caused partly by the previous severe weather & partly by the collision, divided the damage:—Held: on behalf of the schooner there was primâ facie proof that all the damage was caused by the collision, & the owners of the steamer having failed to rebut by conclusive evidence such proof, they were responsible for all the damage.—THE EGYPTIAN (1864), 10 L. ### B. Loss of Profits.

(a) In General.

6626. Whether actual loss necessary—Loss of anticipated profits.]—Where a party who has received a damage by collision, claims to be indemnified for a consequential loss, arising from the non-employment of his vessel whilst under repair, he is bound to prove that he has sustained a direct & positive loss; it will not be sufficient to aver that the vessel, if she had not been detained in dock, might have earned certain probable freight, Claim of a steam co. for demurrage, at the rate of £20 per diem during the repairs, as being the amount at which the vessel might have been hired, not allowed by the registrar & merchants, & the objection to their report upon this ground overruled.

Upon general principles a party who has sustained a damage by collision is entitled to be put, as far as practicable, in the same condition as if the injury had not been suffered (per CUR.).

In order to entitle a party to be indemnified for . . . a consequential loss, being for the detention of his vessel, two things are absolutely necessary—actual loss, & reasonable proof of the amount (per CUR.).—THE CLARENCE (1850), 3 Wm. In an action by the owners of the A. against the owners of the G. the former claimed damages in respect of the loss of the earnings which would have been derived from the employment contracted for:—Held: the damages claimed were not too remote, but flowed directly & naturally from the collision, & such damages should be allowed as would represent the loss of ordinary & fair earnings of such a ship as the A., having regard to the fact that the contract had been entered into.—GRACIE (OWNERS) v. ARGENTINO (OWNERS), THE ARGENTINO (1889), 14 App. Cas. 519; 59 L. 6630. —— Loss of charterparty—Less saving of wear & tear.]—A barque, lying in the Madras Roads, was chartered to proceed to the Coromandel coast, & there load a cargo for London, at a freight of 55*s.* per ton. When about to proceed to her loading port she was run into & seriously damaged by a ship whose owners admitted their liability for the collision. At a reference before the registrar, assisted by merchants, to assess the damages, it was proved that, owing to the barque having been delayed at Madras for repairs, rendered necessary by the collision, the charterers had acquired a right to cancel the charterparty, & that they had cancelled the charterparty; afterwards, when the repairs were completed, the barque being unable to procure more profitable employment, sailed from Madras for London with cargo, at a freight of 45*s.* per ton. The registrar disallowed a claim made by pltfs. in respect of the loss of the charterparty so cancelled, & pltfs. appealed to the ct.:—Held: the case must be again referred to the registrar, with directions to include in the amount of damages a sum in respect of the loss of the charterparty.

Among the deductions . . . will have to be considered . . . the saving of what is called wear & tear of the vessel (SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE).—THE STAR OF INDIA (1876), 1 P. D. 466; 45 L. J. P. 102; 35 L. T. 407; 25 W. R. 377; 3 Asp. M. L. C. 261.

The repairs necessarily occupied so long a time that it was not reasonably possible for the C. to have arrived at Montreal in time to fulfil her charter before the navigation of the St. Lawrence was stopped by ice for the winter. In these circumstances the owners of the C. abandoned the charter, & it was found that they acted prudently in so doing:—Held: the loss arising from the abandonment of the charter was a loss caused by the collision.—THE CONSETT (1880), 5 P. In assessing the damage caused by the detention of the ship for repairs:—Held: the measure of damages was the amount of freight which, but for the accident, the ship would have earned during the period of detention, plus working expenses, & was not the sum of the actual out of pocket expenses, including the cost of the hire of the ship, to which the Admlty. were put during that period.—ADMIRALTY COMRS. v. S.S. No damage was caused to the tug or her equipment by the collision. In an action brought by pltfs. to recover from deft. as damages the amount of towage remuneration which they would have earned if they had completed the towage contract:—Held: pltfs. had no cause of action, for, although there was negligence on the part of deft.'s servants, the loss of towage remuneration was not damage to pltfs. which was the direct consequence of the negligence so as to be recoverable in law.—SOCIÉTÉ ANONYME DE REMORQUAGE À HÉLICE v. BENNETTS, [1911] 1 K. 6663. —— —— —— Annual refit simultaneously effected.]—Resps.' steamship collided with H.M.S. Cairo, a light cruiser, & damaged her. Resps. admitted liability for the collision subject to a reference to the registry for the assessment of damages. The Cairo was temporarily repaired at Hankow, & she then proceeded to Hong Kong for permanent repairs. She was shortly due for her annual refit, & after her arrival at Hong Kong the Admlty. decided to do both sets of repairs at the same time. The combined operations occupied about eight weeks, but the registrar found that the time properly allocated to the collision repairs was twenty days, &, in respect of the loss of the use of the Cairo, he allowed a sum of £100 per diem, this sum being calculated on the basis of 5 per cent. per annum on the estimated capital value of the ship at the time of the collision :—Held : the fact that the Admlty. took the opportunity of the docking required for the collision repairs to do the refitment repairs, which had not become necessary at the time of the collision, was not a ground for reducing the liability of resps. to make good the damage caused by the collision, & the registrar had rightly allowed damages as for the total deprivation of the use of the vessel for the twenty days.—ADMIRALTY COMRS. v. S.S. Sufficient repairs, which took four days, were effected to enable the vessel to continue her voyage. At the time the reference to assess the damages was held no permanent repairs had been effected, & it was improbable that any such repairs would be effected before the end of the war. The district registrar allowed, in addition to the cost of the temporary repairs, (a) a sum for demurrage incurred by reason of the temporary repairs; (b) a sum in respect of the permanent repairs which would have to be done to restore the ship to the same condition as before the collision; & (c) a sum for the prospective loss of time during the execution of such repairs. Defts. appealed:—Held: although the permanent repairs had not been done, pltfs. had proved with reasonable certainty that they would be done; & the prospective loss of time which would be occupied in doing such repairs was a proper element to take into account in assessing damages.—THE KINGSWAY, [1918] P. 344; 87 L. 6675. ——.]—The Vitruvia, in a collision with the Carperby, for which the latter vessel was to blame, sustained damage which did not render her unseaworthy. Seven months afterwards she came to Glasgow to have the damage repaired. The repairs, which took about three weeks, were carried out in a wet dock, but on the last day of the operations she went into a dry dock, which then for the first time became available to have her propeller examined & repaired, a defect, unconnected with the collision, having manifested itself immediately prior to her arrival to Glasgow. That defect, which rendered her unseaworthy, was repaired in a few hours.

In an action against the owners of the Carperby for damages for detention of the Vitruvia during the period necessary to repair the collision damage, the defenders maintained that the pursuers had suffered no loss by that detention, in respect that, during that period, the vessel, owing to the defect in her propeller, was not a seaworthy vessel capable of earning profits.—Held: the defenders were liable for damages for the detention, seeing that, had the collision repairs not been necessary the vessel could have been tipped in a wet dock & the repair to the propeller effected without delay. —VITRUVIA S.S. In an action between the owners of the vessels it was proved that the repairs could have been executed in A. in ten days for about £220:—Held: the owner of the injured vessel could only recover a sum equal to the cost of repairing the vessel at A. together with compensation for the time which the vessel would have lost if she had been repaired there.—BEUCKER v. ABERDEEN STEAM TRAWLING & FISHING CO., LTD., [1910] S. in 1917, in war time, & by arrangement with the Govt. so long as the S., which was owned by an oil importing co., was engaged in carrying oil she was free from requisition. The amount of oil her owners could import was limited to a certain quantity per annum, & in fact pltfs. imported during 1917 the maximum quantity allowed.

The registrar, & on appeal the President, on evidence that extra tonnage was chartered, allowed damages for the thirteen days' detention based on the cost of hiring a substituted ship at the market rate for free tonnage :—Held : as it appeared that all the extra tonnage chartered during 1917 was chartered in order to carry the full quota & not in consequence of the collision, & that the S., in spite of the detention, made the only other voyage she could have made in 1917, the damages had been assessed on a wrong basis, & the case must go back to the registrar to assess the actual pecuniary loss, taking into consideration the facts that pltfs. imported their full quota of oil during 1917 & that they could not have used the S. for any other purpose.

The L. was condemned in a suit for damage brought by the C. & on reference to the registrar & merchants as to the amount, they struck out the costs of the salvage suit incurred by the C. because her owners had made no tender to the salvors. (2) It has always been the custom, whenever an action for damage has been brought against another vessel, & where it has been necessary to have recourse to assistance in the nature of salvage, for the remuneration paid for that salvage service to form a part of the claim for damage as well as the costs incurred on both sides in the salvage suit (DR. 6696. What damages recoverable—Value of goods at port of destination—How value ascertained.]—It appears to me that the passage which has been read from LORD BLACKBURN'S judgment in O'Hanlan v. Great Western Ry. Co. (1865), 6 B. & S. 484, is applicable to all those cases where the question is what amount of damages should be allowed. He says "setting aside all special damage," & no question of "special damage was left to the jury," the natural & fair measure of damages is the value of the goods at the place & time at which they ought to have been delivered to the owner. Now the value of the goods at the place of delivery must be the market price if there is a market there for such goods. If there is not either from the smallness of the place or the scarceness of the particular goods, the value at the time & place of delivery would have to be ascertained as a fact by the jury taking into consideration various matters, including in addition to the cost price & expenses of transit the reasonable profits of the importer, which are adjusted by what is called the higgling & bargaining of the market (HANNEN, P.).—THE NOTTING HILL (1884), 9 P. of lading, on which the master endorsed a receipt for £1,000 as advanced freight, & also a policy of insurance on advanced freight. Ship A. was lost through a collision with defts.' vessel, whose negligence was admitted. It was proved that the difference between the value of the cargo at the port of destination & at the port of loading would have considerably exceeded £1,000. In an action by the holders of the bill of lading for £1,000 against defts.' ship:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to recover the sum, though it was not strictly speaking advanced freight, but a prospective increase in the value of the cargo, & the insurers were subrogated to the rights of pltfs.

(2) A sum in respect of disbursements for ship A. on her voyage & wages paid in advance had been awarded to the owners of the A. by the registrar & merchants:—Held: this was no bar to pltfs.' right to recover in this action.

(3) In a case of total loss at sea by collision, a shipowner who has cargo of his own on board is entitled to recover in lieu of freight, what would have been the enhanced value of the cargo at its destination, less the expenses of earning that value, & that is the proper form of claim, & not a claim for expenses in making the ship fit for sea, etc.—THE THYATIRA (1883), 8 P. In estimating the value of a vessel at the time of a collision, whereby she was lost, the best evidence is the opinion of competent persons who knew the vessel shortly before the time of loss; next, the opinion of persons well conversant with shipping generally. The original price of the vessel, the cost of repairs done, the amount at which she was insured, etc., are evidence of value, but evidence of inferior weight.—THE IRON-MASTER (1859), Sw. 441; 166 E. The Persien, while still under requisition, was lost by enemy action in Dec. 1917. Owing to restrictions imposed by the Defence of the Realm Regulations & the general position of shipping, it was impossible for claimants to buy any British vessel to replace the Persien, & the price in the market of a neutral vessel of the same size as the Persien would amount to £432,000. The owners claimed that sum, or, alternatively, the price which they paid for the vessel in May, 1916, as the ascertained value of the Persien at the time of her loss. The umpire found that the value of the Persien in the market at the time of her loss was £111,000:—Held: the value so found by the umpire was the "ascertained value" within the meaning of the charterparty.—LLOYD-BELGE (GREAT BRITAIN), LTD. v. SHIPPING CONTROLLER (1919), 89 L. Upon the occasion in question she was delayed at Liverpool repairing the damage caused by the collision, & in order to save time & to get to Havre as soon as possible she filled up with coal at Liverpool & did not call at Cardiff. the Admlty., came into collision with a steamship in the English Channel, & put back to the Thames for repairs. The cargo of coals had to be discharged, &, by arrangement between the Admlty., as the owners of the cargo, & the owners of the collier, the voyage was treated as abandoned, the cargo sold, & a sum of £1,000 agreed to be paid by the Admlty. to the owners of the collier as a "substituted expense" in lieu of the larger sum which, it was estimated, would have been incurred for storage & reshipment if the collier had carried on the coals at the end of the period required for repairs. At the usual ships' reference, after a decree of both to blame, a moiety of the claim by the owners of the collier for repairs & detention was paid by the owners of the steamship; but, at a reference between the Admlty. & the owners of the steamship, a claim, made by the Admlty. against the owners of the steamship for a moiety of their adjusted proportion of the £1,000, was disallowed by the registrar, & the disallowance affirmed on appeal:—Held: the amount claimed by way of "substituted expense" was the result of a reasonable arrangement to minimise the loss, & was such a consequence of the collision as to render the owners of the steamship, as wrongdoers, liable for a moiety of their adjusted proportion.—THE MINNETONKA, [1905] P. 206; 74 L. 6727. Cost of raising wreck.]—A steamship ran down & sank a fishing vessel in the river Thames. The owners of the steamship admitted liability subject to the claim of the owners of the fishing vessel being referred to the registrar & merchants. At the reference the owners of the fishing vessel claimed £355, the sum which the Thames Conservancy were claiming from them as the cost of raising the vessel. The registrar rejected the claim on the ground that the owners of the fishing vessel had abandoned their vessel or ought to have abandoned her, in which case the Thames Conservancy would have had no right to recover the cost of raising the wreck from them. The Thames Conservancy sued the owners of the fishing vessel in the K. B. Div., & recovered the expense of raising the wreck & costs. The owners of the fishing vessel appealed from the decision of the Admlty. registrar:—Held: (1) the Thames Conservancy had under Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (c. clxxxvii), s. 77, a right to recover from the owners of the vessel sunk the cost of raising the wreck whether it had been abandoned or not, & the owners of the fishing vessel were entitled to recover that sum from the owners of the steamship; (2) the owners of the fishing vessel were not entitled to recover from the owners of the steamship the costs paid to the conservancy in the K. her cargo transferred to the steamship G. S., which was at that time chartered to pltfs. at £5 10*s.* per day.

Pltfs. did not charter a substitute for the *M. R. The registrar was not bound to take the chartering rate for neutrals.

6740. —— Eleven years delay in proceeding.]—(1) In 1878, a collision occurred, in the North Sea, between a Norwegian steamer & a British vessel, in which the latter was sunk. The name & place of business of the Norwegian co. owning the steamer were known to the owners of the British vessel, & for one or more days, on forty-seven occasions during the following eleven years, the Norwegian steamer put into ports in the United Kingdom. During the same period there were changes in the capital & in the shareholders of the Norwegian co.

In 1889 pltfs., the owners of the British vessel, instituted an action in rem against the Norwegian steamer.

The owners of the Norwegian steamer, as defts., pleaded, in bar of the action, that the claim of pltfs., their rights, if any, & their maritime lien, if acquired, had been lost by laches, & that it would be otherwise inequitable to allow the action to proceed, as there had been changes of interest in the ownership of the steamer, the rights of third parties had intervened, & the greater part of the crew of the steamer were not now available to give evidence:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to prosecute their claim for damages, for in each case the particular circumstances must be looked at to see whether it would be inequitable to entertain the suit, considering the period of time that had elapsed since the collision, the opportunities of arresting the vessel, the loss of witnesses, the loss of evidence, & the change of property, & in this case, though defts. would be entitled to every presumption which could fairly be made in their favour by reason of the absence of any witness, defts. had failed to show that the merits could not be gone into.

(2) The action was subsequently compromised on the term that defts. should pay to pltfs. one half of the damages proceeded for. In assessing such damages the registrar awarded interest on the amount at 4 per cent. from the time the British vessel would probably have reached her destination, May 1, 1878, until payment.

On objection to the registrar's report, on the ground that no interest was due at all on an amount which had not been ascertained until the institution of the action, or that no interest was due under the circumstances of this case, as no claim had been made for eleven years, or that the interest should be limited to six years by analogy to the Statute of Limitations:—Held: the interest was properly awarded for the whole period, according to the practice in Admlty.—THE KONG MAGNUS, [1891] P. 223; 65 L. The £100,000 being insufficient to satisfy pltfs.' judgment, pltfs., who admitted that qua damages they could not recover more than the £100,000, threatened to arrest defts.' vessel in respect of interest & costs; &, under protest, defts. provided bail in a further sum to avoid arrest:—Held: (1) interest on sums due in respect of collision damage was awarded by way of damages, & accordingly pltfs. were not entitled to interest except for the period between the judgment of the Ct. of Appeal & the judgment of the House of Lords, three hundred & nine days, in respect of which defts. were liable for interest on the £100,000 at 4 per cent.; (2) pltfs. were entitled to costs & interest on costs at 4 per cent.—THE JOANNIS VATIS (No. 2), [1922] P. 213; 91 L. Vessel hired by Admiralty—Special agreement as to payment—Interest on sum paid from date of payment.]—While on hire by the Admlty. a steam trawler was sunk through a collision with the Rosalind. The value of the trawler was agreed between the parties, but the Admlty. claimed, as bailees in possession, to recover as part of their damages interest from the date of the loss. The owners of the Rosalind contended that interest was only payable from the date when the Admlty. paid the value of the trawler to her owners:—Held: under the Admlty. rule a bailee in possession was entitled to recover from a wrongdoer a complete equivalent of the chattel deteriorated or lost, namely, its value at the time of the deterioration or loss, with interest from that date; but, inasmuch as there was an agreement between the parties that defts. should pay what the Admlty. had to pay to the owners of the trawler, interest on that payment only ran from the date of payment.—THE ROSALIND (1920), 90 L. J. P. 126; 37 T. L. R. 116.

6750. Salvors—Wreck damaged during salving.]—Pltfs. contracted to salve a sunken vessel on a "no cure, no pay" basis. In pursuance of the contract they attached their salvage plant to the wreck & incurred considerable expenditure in the salving operations. At a time when, as pltfs. alleged, the successful raising of the wreck was assured, it was run into by deft.'s steamship through the negligence of deft.'s servants & irreparably damaged. Pltfs. claimed damages for the loss of their plant & also in respect of the loss of the beneficial contract due to the damage to the wreck:—Held: pltfs. were in possession of the wreck, & accordingly they were entitled to recover in respect of the damage thereto; & between them pltfs. & the owners of the wreck, if the latter recovered judgment against defts., were entitled to recover the whole value of the wreck. The exact value, which was a question for the registrar, would depend on whether pltfs. were right in their contention that the salvage operations would have been successful.—THE ZELO, [1922] P. 9; 91 L. 6753. What vessels are immune—Vessel requisitioned by Crown.]—After the outbreak of war, pltfs., the owners, master, & crew of a steam tug, commenced a salvage action in rem against the owners of a steamship, her cargo & freight; but they did not arrest the vessel, & subsequently abandoned the claim against the cargo, which consisted of oil fuel for the use of the navy & was the property of the Crown. The owners of the steamship & her freight appeared as defts., & gave the usual undertaking in lieu of bail, statements of claim & defence being subsequently delivered. Prior to the commencement of the salvage action the steamship had been requisitioned under the powers conferred by the Royal Proclamation (Transports & Auxiliaries) of Aug. 3, 1914, & as the vessel thereby became, for the time being, a ship belonging to His Majesty, within 1894 Act, s. 557, the Crown applied for & obtained an order that all further proceedings in the action with a view to the arrest or detention of the ship should be stayed so long as the vessel remained under requisition in the service of the Crown.—THE BROADMAYNE, [1916] 1 P. 64; 85 L. 6756. —— —— —— ——.]—Pltfs.' & defts.' vessels came into collision & both received damages. Pltfs. brought an action in rem against defts., "the owners of the steamship Neptune." Defts. counterclaimed, & applied to pltfs. for security to answer the counterclaim. Security was given, but on pltf. making a similar application defts. refused to give security on the ground that the Neptune was owned by the French Govt., & was not subject to arrest:—Held: the ct. had no power to order security to be given or, in default thereof, to stay defts.' counterclaim.—THE NEPTUNE, [1919] P. 17; 88 L. J. P. 94.

6757. —— —— Used for trading purposes.]—A ship belonging to a foreign sovereign, but used by him as a merchant vessel for trading purposes, is liable to be proceeded against in rem in the Admlty. Ct. for damage done to another ship by collision.

Part XIII.—Damage to Objects Other than Ships.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

6765. Duty to avoid invisible objects—Whether dependent on notice of existence—Damage to cables—Presumption that master knows existence of cable.]—In an action for damage done through negligence to the telegraphic cable of pltfs. by reason of its being dragged & broken by an anchor from defts.' ship, defts. pleaded that they were aliens, & that their vessel was more than three miles from the seashore of England & out of the jurisdiction, & that in the usual & ordinary course of navigation the ship had occasion to cast anchor & afterwards got it up again, & that the anchor, without any default of defts. & in consequence of the effect of the winds & waves upon the vessel, dropped the cable, & became entangled in it, & was necessarily a little injured; & that there was no buoy to mark the position & existence of the cable, of which defts. were wholly ignorant: —Held: pltfs. had a good cause of action, as it must be inferred that shipowners were aware of the existence of those cables, & therefore were bound to navigate their vessels with such care & skill as not to damage them.—SUBMARINE TELEGRAPH CO. v. DICKSON (1864), 15 C. B. N. S. 759; 3 New Rep. 572; 33 L. J. C. P. 139; 10 L. T. 32; 10 Jur. N. S. 211; 12 W. R. 384; 2 Mar. L. C. 9; 143 E. R. 983.

6767. —— —— Damage to oyster bed.]—A ship in charge of a compulsory pilot, was at high water brought into & anchored by the pilot in a river in which there were oyster beds, the existence of which was known to the pilot. The place where she was anchored was not the usual & customary place for vessels of her size & draught to anchor in. At low water she grounded, & thereby did damage to an oyster bed. On notice of the existence of the oyster bed being given to the master he took all reasonable means to remove his ship as speedily as possible. In an action by the lessee of the oyster bed against the shipowner & pilot:—Held: the act of the pilot in anchoring the ship where he did was negligence which made him liable, but the ship was not liable because the master's duty on receiving notice of the existence of the oyster bed was to take all reasonable measures, not extraordinary measures, to remove his ship, & this he had done. —THE OCTAVIA STELLA (1887), 57 L. 6768. Liability for indirect consequences—Negligence causing collision with sandbank—Ship becoming unmanageable—Subsequently driven by wind & tide against sea wall.]—Defts.' vessel, owing to the negligence of their servants, struck on a sandbank, & becoming from that cause unmanageable, was driven by wind & tide upon a sea wall of pltfs.', which it damaged:—Held: defts. were liable for the damage caused.—ROMNEY MARSH (BAILIFFS) v. TRINITY HOUSE (1870), L. 6770. —— Collision with dock gates—Detention of vessel arriving later.]—Defts.' vessel negligently damaged the gates of a dock, & the gates were closed for repairs. Pltfs.' vessel arrived outside the dock & was prevented from entering the dock to load a cargo then waiting therein.

By statute the dock co. were obliged upon payment of certain rates & subject to certain conditions to keep the dock "open to all persons for the shipping & unshipping of goods, & the embarking & landing of passengers."

In an action by pltfs. against defts. to recover damages for the detention of the vessel so caused by defts.:—Held: defts.' negligence was too indirectly related to the alleged interference with pltfs.' rights & their loss to constitute a good cause of action by pltfs. against defts. Semble: where a shipowner has been obstructed in the exercise of his right to navigate his ship in a public navigable channel, a highway for ships, & has thereby suffered actual loss & damage by detention of the ship an action lies.—ANGLO-ALGERIAN S.S. After the completion of the works, & after a reasonable time for the removal of the piles, defts. sold the piles to J., who undertook to remove them by a certain date, or sooner if required by the Lords of the Admlty. The Admlty. subsequently required J. not to draw the piles, & J., acting under those orders, cut the piles off on a level with the bed of the channel. The soil was subsequently washed from around the stumps, & pltf.'s vessel struck against them & was injured. In the position in which the piles existed at the time defts. delivered them up to J., the damage could not have been done without pltf.'s gross negligence :—Held : there was no cause of action against defts.—BARTLETT v. BAKER (1864), 3 H. & C. 153 ; 34 L. When the L. was partly through the opening, the swing of the bridge was stopped by a great gust of wind & the bridge was blown back striking the L. which had ventured into the gap, causing her considerable damage :—Held : neither the machinery nor the handling of the bridge in anyway caused or contributed to the accident ; but the L., in attempting to pass through before the bridge was fully opened was per se, apart from any rules forbidding it, guilty of negligence & of reckless & unseamanlike manœuvre, which was the sole originating & determining cause of the accident.—NIAGARA, ST. Lagan, vel potius ligan, is when the goods which are so cast into the sea, & afterwards the ship perishes, & such goods cast are so heavy that they sink to the bottom, & the mariners, to the intent to have them again, tie to them a buoy, or cork, or such other thing that will not sink, so that they may find them again, & dicitur lig, a ligando; & none of these goods which are called jetsam, flotsam or ligan, are called wreck so long as they remain in or upon the sea; but if any of them by the sea be put upon the land, then they shall be said wreck.—CONSTABLE'S CASE (1601), 5 Co. 6778. —— ——.] — Timber found floating without an apparent owner at sea, having drifted from the place where it was moored in a river, is not "wreck" within the meaning of that word as defined by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 2:—Held: persons who had secured such timber could not enforce a claim for salvage in respect of their services under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 458, 460.

We must give to the words found in this Act their ordinary interpretation. Wreck, in many parts of England, belongs to the lords of manors. But in order to constitute a legal wreck the goods must come to land; if they continue at sea the law distinguishes them as jetsam, flotsam or lagan. That is the well known legal interpretation of the terms, & we need not search modern dictionaries to see how they are to be understood (WATSON, B.).

According to the well-known meaning of flotsam, as stated in the Termes de la Ley, it refers to goods having been at sea in a ship & separated from it by some peril (MARTIN, B.).—PALMER v. ROUSE (1858), 3 H. & N. 505; 27 L. J. Ex. 437; 31 L. T. O. S. 220; 22 J. P. 773; 6 W. R. 674; 157 E. R. 569.

6779. —— —— Not necessarily "left dry."]—To constitute "wreck of the sea," goods must have touched the ground, though they need not have been left dry.—R. v. FORTY NINE CASKS OF BRANDY (1836), 3 Hag. Adm. 257; 166 E. R. 401.

6780. —— —— Property becoming again afloat after having touched land.]—Things floating, though between high & low water mark, not having touched the ground, can not be wreccum maris; if fixed to the land between high & low water mark, though with some water round them, they are wreccum maris. If after having once touched the land between high & low water mark, they are again afloat, they are not necessarily wreccum maris, but their legal character will depend on the particular circumstances.

"Wreccum maris" is not such in legal acceptation, till it comes ashore, until it is within the land jurisdiction; whilst at sea, it belongs to the King in his office of Admlty., as derelict, flotsam, jetsam, or ligan. Above high water mark it belongs to the lord of the manor as grantee of the Crown; but beyond low water mark he can have no claim; it is on the high seas & belongs to the Admlty. It is equally clear law that between high & low water marks it is divisum imperium; when the tide covers this space it is sea; when it recedes, it is again land & within the jurisdiction of the manor. If the article be floating it belongs to the sea; if it is not "wreccum maris" but "flotsam"; if it become fixed to the land, though there may be some tide remaining round it, it may be considered as "wreccum maris," but it having merely touched the ground, & being again floating about, its character will depend upon its state at the time it was seized & secured into possession; whether, for instance, the person who seized it, as salvor, was in a boat, or wading, or swimming (SIR JOHN NICOLL).—R. v. TWO CASKS OF TALLOW (1837), 3 Hag. 6781. —— —— ——.]—A claim by the Lord of the Manor, as grantee of wreck, to a foreign vessel, found deserted upon a sand in the mouth of a river:—Held: the property was not wreccum maris, because when taken possession of by the agents of the Lord of the Manor it was not on the shore or land, but on land covered by sea; the claim of the Lord of the Manor not being sustainable, unless, at the time of taking possession, the vessel was either on the actual shore, or left dry on land at other times covered with water.—THE PAULINE (1845), 2 Wm. The smack then left her for the purpose of carrying away some of her stores, with the intention however of returning. The owner of another smack came to her afterwards & finding no one in or near the vessel, & her deck under water, took away the anchor & hawser; & delivered them to the deputy vice-admiral of Essex. The deputy vice-admiral, who received the anchor & hawser, alleged to have been left at sea, from the finder, refused, on application by the real owner, to deliver them up until the salvage was paid, or security given for the payment of it:—Held: this was a conversion; but if he had merely refused to deliver them up until it was ascertained whether salvage was due or not, it would not have amounted to a conversion.—CLARK v. CHAMBERLAIN (1836), 2 M. & W. 78; 2 Gale, 217; 6 L. 6794. Liability for lighting—Control remaining in owner.]—(1) Where the owners of a wreck remained in possession thereof, but the port authority undertook & neglected the duty of indicating its position so as to secure ships entering the harbour where she lay from the danger of collision with her:—Held: neither the owners nor the wreck were liable for a collision which ensued; the control & management thereof had been legitimately transferred by the owners to the port authority, acting within the apparent scope of its powers, & in the absence of negligence by the owners no maritime lien arose.

(2) In order to fix the owners of a wreck with liability two things must be shown, first, that . . . the control of the vessel is in them, that is to say, has not been abandoned, or legitimately transferred, &, secondly, that they have . . . been guilty of wilful misconduct or neglect (JEUNE, P.).

(3) The colliding ship having been navigated in circumstances of instant peril with reasonable care & skill:—Held: it was not answerable for the collision.—UTOPIA (OWNERS) v. PRIMULA (OWNERS), THE UTOPIA, [1893] A. 6796. —— —— What amounts to transfer of control—Employment of independent contractor to raise wreck.]—A barge belonging to defts., without negligence on their part, was sunk in the fairway of the river Thames. They employed an underwaterman to conduct the salvage operations necessary to raise her &, for that purpose, put him in possession & control; but, owing to the guard vessel placed by him, with lights upon it, to mark the submerged barge, having been negligently allowed to get out of position, pltf.'s steamship coming up the river, without negligence, ran upon the wreck & sustained damage:—Held: defts. were personally responsible, as (a) they were bound to see that the necessary precautions were taken to prevent danger to the public, & could not escape from this liability by throwing the blame on the contractor employed by them to do the work; (b) because they were under an obligation to protect other vessels from receiving injury from the sunken barge, as the employment of the contractor did not amount to an abandonment or transfer of the possession, management, & control of the wreck.—THE SNARK, [1900] P. 105; 69 L. 6797. Liability for expenses of lighting.]—Through the negligence of defts.' servants a collision occurred in the port of Southampton between defts.' steamship & a barge, with the result that the barge sank. The owners & underwriters of the barge having abandoned her, the statutory harbour authority incurred expenses in lighting & buoying the wreck & subsequently removing the obstruction by blowing it up. In an action brought by the harbour authority against the owners of the steamship to recover the expenses so incurred:—Held: defts., the owners of the steamship, were liable to make good to pltfs., the harbour authority, the expenses incurred by them whether the case was regarded from the point of view of the breach of duty or negligence of defts. or from that of a public nuisance caused through their fault.—THE ELLA, [1915] P. 111; 84 L. By 42 & 43 Vict. c. cxlvi, a moiety of the residue of light duties to which ships entering or leaving the harbour of P. contributed, were to be paid to defts. & to be applied by them in (inter alia), buoying & lighting the harbour & channel of P. c. Liability for lighting—Wreck sold to be taken to pieces—Wreck still in charge of persons put in charge after ship sank.]—Pltfs. claimed damages suffered by running into the steamer O. which was sunk & obstructed navigation. Deft. was neither proprietor nor in possession of the steamer at the time it was sunk, but had purchased it a few days before the accident for the purpose of taking it to pieces. The persons who had been placed in charge of it, after it was sunk, were still in charge at the time of the accident but had kept no lights or other sufficient indications to prevent a collision:—Held: deft. was liable for the damages caused.—BAKER v. FREEMAN (1884), 10 Q. 6797 i. Liability for expenses of lighting.]—The right of the Crown to charge the owner with the expenses of lighting a wrecked ship during the time it constitutes an obstruction was first given by 49 Vict. c. 36, & such expenses could not be recovered under 37 Vict. c. 29 or 43 Vict. c. 30.—R. v. MISSISSIPPI & DOMINION S.S. The wreck not removed was not buoyed, & pltf.'s vessel was in consequence wrecked:—Held: the statutes imposed upon defts. an obligation to remove the wreck from the channel or to mark its position by buoys, & not having done so they were liable in damages to pltf.—DORMONT v. FURNESS RY. CO. (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 496; 52 L. J. Q. B. 331; 49 L. T. 134; 47 J. P. 711; 5 Asp. M. L. C. 127.

6800. —— ——.]—The first action was brought by the owners of a steamship bound from Calcutta to Dundee against the Dundee Harbour Trustees to recover the damage alleged to have been caused to the ship by a collision in the spring of 1919 with a submerged wreck at the mouth of the estuary of the Tay, of which the trustees were the harbour authority, by reason of the negligence of the trustees in not taking reasonable steps to secure the attendance of pilots for vessels coming up the Tay & in failing to have the estuary properly buoyed so as to apprise vessels coming in of the presence of the wreck. The trustees denied negligence & pleaded that the faulty navigation of the ship contributed to the collision. The second was a similar action by the owners of another ship & was met by a similar plea. The third action was brought by the owners of the cargo on board the latter ship in respect of damage sustained in consequence of the collision of the ship:—Held: in each action the damage was solely caused by the negligence of the trustees in both the particulars mentioned.—ANCHOR LINE (HENDERSON BROTHERS), LTD. v. DUNDEE HARBOUR TRUSTEES, ELLERMAN LINES, LTD. v. DUNDEE HARBOUR TRUSTEES, THOMSON, SHEPHERD & CO., LTD. v. DUNDEE HARBOUR TRUSTEES (1922), 38 T. 6804. Exercise of powers of removal—Condition precedent to exercise—Report in writing of marine surveyor—Mersey Docks.]—Mersey Docks Act, 1874, s. 11, as amended by Mersey Docks & Harbour Board Act, 1889, s. 28, enables the Mersey Docks & Harbour Board to raise, destroy, or remove any wrecks of vessels or any vessels sunk or stranded in any dock or elsewhere within the port of Liverpool which are "in the judgment of the marine surveyor . . . of the Board . . . such judgment being recorded in writing signed by him & deposited with the secretary of the Board," an obstruction to safe & convenient navigation:—Held: it is not a condition precedent to the exercise by the Board of their statutory power to raise, destroy, or remove a sunken or stranded vessel that the judgment of the marine surveyor that the vessel is an obstruction to safe navigation should first have been recorded in writing & deposited with the secretary of the Board. It is sufficient to enable the Board to exercise their powers that the marine surveyor honestly comes to the conclusion that the vessel must be raised, destroyed or removed, & that within a reasonable time after the forming of his judgment to that effect, he puts it in writing & deposits it with the secretary of the Board.—JONES v. MERSEY DOCKS & HARBOUR BOARD (1913), 108 L. The Admlty. sold the wreck in June, 1918, to pltf. who commenced salvage operations. In Sept. 1918, before these operations were completed, defts., being unaware that the wreck had been sold, blew it up under the powers conferred by 1894 Act, s. 531 (1), on the ground that it was a danger to navigation. In an action for damages:—Held: as by sect. 741 of above Act defts. had no right to deal with ships belonging to the Crown, & as an opinion formed in Nov. 1914, that the wreck was a danger to navigation could be no justification for defts.' action in Sept. 1918, pltf. was entitled to damages.—CHRISTIE v. TRINITY HOUSE CORPN. Where a wreck became an obstruction to a harbour, & the underwriters subsequently, & before the removal, paid the owner as for a total loss:—Held: such payment did not make them liable to the harbour master

There was no evidence of negligence on applts.' part. Applts. gave their underwriters notice of abandonment as a total loss & were paid on that footing, & also gave the harbour authority notice of the abandonment. The harbour authority, acting under Harbours, Docks & Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 27), & Removal of Wrecks Act, 1877 (c. 16), took possession of the wreck, raised part of the cargo & sold it, dispersed the wreck by explosives, & after deducting the proceeds of the cargo from the expenses sued applts. for the balance under s. 56 of the Act of 1847:—Held: applts. were not liable (1) because although owners of the ship when she became an obstruction, yet having abandoned her before the expenses were incurred, they were not "the owners" within sect. 56 of the Act of 1847 & were not personally liable for the repayment; (2) because the expenses could not be recovered from the owner where the wreck had been removed by destruction since the Act of 1847 only gave the harbour authority power to "remove" & not to "destroy."—ARROW SHIPPING CO. v. TYNE IMPROVEMENT COMRS., THE CRYSTAL, [1894] A. A portion of the cargo, worth about £1,200, was raised by them from the wreck, at a cost of £294 14*s.*, & they ultimately blew up & destroyed the hull of the vessel & the rest of the cargo. The expense incurred by them in removing the obstruction caused by ship & cargo was about £4,500:—Held: defts. were not entitled to detain pltfs.'

6808 i. —— —— Abandonment by owner before expenses incurred.]—The Victorian Marine Act, 1890, s. 13, differing in that respect from the English Harbours, Docks, & Piers Clauses Act, 1847, s. 56, imposes upon the owner or master of any ship sunken within a port, the duty of clearing the port thereof, or of reimbursing the statutory officer the expenses incurred by him for that purpose:—Held: the registered owner of the ship at the date of the occurrence cannot escape liability by abandoning the wreck to the underwriters, who, although they become at common law owners of the wreck, are not within the terms of the sect.—HOWARD SMITH v. WILSON, [1896] A. i. —— —— Expenses of removal by Crown.]—A ship had become a wreck, &, owing to her position, constituted an obstruction to navigation:—Held: it was not necessary in an information against the owners for the recovery of moneys paid out by the Crown under 37 Vict. c. 29 & 43 Vict. c. 30, for removing the obstruction, to allege negligence or wrongdoing against the owners in relation to the existence of such obstruction; under the Acts it is only the owner of the ship or thing at the time of its removal by the Crown who is responsible for the payment of the expenses of such removal.—R. v. MISSISSIPPI & DOMINION S.S. The contractor blew up the wreck & sold for his own benefit some of the material. The Crown sued the owner for the contract price it had paid the contractor & for certain expenses:—Held: the Crown should recover; the Minister had substantially complied with Navigable Waters Protection Act, 1906, ss. 16–18; the value to the contractor of the materials after removal must be deemed to have been considered in making his tender for the work, & the owner thus got the benefit thereof in a lower contract price.—R. v. ANDERSON, [1920] 1 W. # Part XV.—Salvage.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

6813. Statutable meaning.]—It [the word salvage] does not . . . extend to all acts of salvage, or services rendered to the cargo; but its statutable meaning is confined . . . to the remuneration allotted to salvors, under the name of salvage, for a direct salvage bounty; & in which they have the sole interest, & it does not go beyond that part of the cargo which may be sold for their express benefit. . . . The property saved is to be restored to the owners upon the payment of a reasonable remuneration; but they are not to be indemnified by the Govt., nor is the Govt. to be charged with unreasonable demands for their advantage (LORD STOWELL).—THE JONGE NICOLAAS (1823), 1 Hag. Adm. 201; 166 E. R. 72.

6814. Duty of salved vessel—To accommodate movements to those of salving vessel.]—In salvage operations, the vessel asking for assistance has a duty cast upon her to accommodate, as far as possible, her own movements to those of the salving vessel & to render assistance in the common enterprise.—HATFIELD (OWNERS) v. GLASGOW (OWNERS), THE GLASGOW (1914), 84 L. ## SECT. 2.—NATURE OF SALVAGE.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

6815. A question of jus gentium.]—THE TWO FRIENDS, No. 8219, post.

6816. Founded on equity of remuneration.]—All salvage, whether civil or military, is founded on the equity of remunerating private & spontaneous services rendered in the protection of the lives & property of others.—THE CALYPSO (1828), 2 Hag. Adm. 209; 166 E. R. 221.

6817. ——.]—(1) Salvage, in its primary character at least, is personal.

Salvage, in its simple character, is the service which those who recover property from loss or danger at sea, render to the owners, with the responsibility of making restitution, & with a lien for their reward. It is personal in its primary character, at least; & those who are so employed in the service are those whom the law considers as standing in the first degree of relation to the property & to the proprietors. . . . These are the principles on which the ct. proceeds in compelling restitution, when necessary, or in assigning a reward. It looks primarily to the actual salvor, & has uniformly rejected all claims founded on prerogative rights, as of the Lord High Admiral in former times, of lords of manors, of magistrates, & of flag officers, except with reference to assistance substantially & beneficially afforded (SIR CHRISTOPHER ROBINSON).

(2) In cases of salvage the estimate of reward is affected by various considerations.

The general principles which govern the discretion of this ct. in such cases, & the principle cases on the subject are too familar to be repeated; they amount to this, that the ct. endeavours always to combine the consideration of what is due to the owners, in the protection of property, with the liberality due to the salvors in remunerating meritorious services. All claims of specific proportions & particularly the distinction of derelict, have been discountenanced, & may be said, indeed, never to have existed in modern times (SIR CHRISTOPHER ROBINSON).—THE THETIS (1833), 3 Hag. Adm. 14; 6 L. T. 914; 166 E. R. 312; on appeal (1834), 2 Knapp, 390, P. C.

6818. ——.]—(1) Towage of a ship near the land in unsettled weather, if her ground tackle is disabled, is in the nature of salvage.

A steam tug was engaged to tow a ship from the North Foreland to Gravesend, & towed her to the Prince's channel, where both vessels anchored to stop tide. In the night a gale of wind arose, & blew the ship to sea, with loss of anchors & damage to hawsepipes, bowplanking & windlass. The tug was forced to run to Ramsgate, & the next day, the weather having moderated, put to sea, & after considerable search discovered the ship, which had received an anchor & chain by a lugger from the shore. The ship was then towed by the steam tug, another tug assisting, to the port of London:—Held: the services of both tugs were in the nature of salvage, & the first tug was entitled to salvage remuneration for her labour & loss of employment whilst seeking the ship.

It is of the utmost importance to the safety of shipping, that the owners of steam tugs & other salvors should know that the ct. is inclined to reward liberally unusual efforts to assist vessels in distress, wherever these efforts are successful (DR. LUSHINGTON).

6821. Right independent of contract.] — (1) Where the owners of a tug contracted to tow a number of barges at sea for an agreed sum, it being part of the contract, that, if the barges or any of them broke adrift during the towage, the tug owners were nevertheless to be entitled to the sum, & in consequence of the severity of the weather the voyage was unduly protracted, the barges broke adrift on several occasions, & were picked up again, & men in charge of the barges were saved from possible loss of life, the ct. awarded salvage on the ground that the services were beyond what was contemplated by the parties when entering into the towage contract.

(2) An action in personam for salvage lies against the owners of the salved property, although the salved property has been transferred to others before the institution of the suit.

(3) The liability for salvage is not confined to those who have the absolute property in the thing saved, but extends to persons having a beneficial interest therein & subject to pecuniary loss if the property were not saved.

6824. —— Services which a prudent man would accept—Though in fact declined.]—A steam tug, employed by the National Lifeboat Institution solely for the purpose of towing a lifeboat of that institution, went out with the lifeboat in tow to the assistance of a disabled steam vessel, &, after lying by all night, made fast ahead of the steam vessel & towed her, whilst the lifeboat, with her crew, was towed astern of the steam vessel. Subsequently the services of a second tug were accepted by the master of the steam vessel, & the master of that tug insisted, in spite of the remonstrance of the master of the steam vessel, in taking the services of a third tug, which was made fast ahead of the second tug. The steam vessel was successfully towed to a place of safety. In an action of salvage it was admitted by the owners of the salved vessel that services were rendered by the first two tugs; but they denied the right of the coxswain & crew of the lifeboat & of the owners, master, & crew of the third tug, to any award:—Held: (1) all pltfs. were entitled to salvage, for the first tug could not go out without taking the lifeboat with her, &, therefore, for salvage purposes, the crew of the lifeboat were to be regarded as if they formed part of the crew of the tug, though with a more moderate reward; (2) the owners, master, & crew of the third tug were to be regarded as salvors, for though the services of that tug were refused by the master of the salved vessel, &, as it turned out, were not in fact required, that tug made fast at the request of the second tug at a time when it was reasonably prudent & necessary for the salved vessel to have the services of a third tug.—THE AUGUSTE LEGEMBRE, [1902] P. 123; 71 L. Pltfs.' steamship P., one of the vessels in the convoy, offered to tow the K., & the commander of the escorting warship accepted the offer & ordered the P. to take the K. in tow. The P. went back to the K. & informed her master that, acting under orders the P. was to take the K. in tow. The master of the K. accepted the services under protest, & the P. towed the K., which was able to work sometimes both & sometimes one of her engines for a distance of 900 miles. The services enabled the K. to rejoin the convoy & to remain with it, thereby securing the protection of the escort against hostile attack:—Held: the K. being in danger, it was immaterial that the services were accepted under protest, or that the commander whose orders the K., had to obey, had ordered her to be taken in tow, & pltfs. were entitled to salvage remuneration.—THE KANGAROO, [1918] P. 327; 88 L. 6827. —— From pirates.]—The owners of a ship recovered from persons alleged to be pirates, by one of H.M. ships, have, under Piracy Act, 1850 (c. 26), s. 5, a sufficient interest to entitle them to be heard against an application, on the part of the officers & crew of such H.M. ship, for a reward for services as against pirates.—H.M.S. VIRAGO (1852), 16 Jur. 1145.

6828. —— From wreckers.]—A vessel having got ashore on the Parkin Rock in the Red Sea, her master & part of the crew proceeded to Aden for assistance. During their absence the crew left on board were driven away by Arab wreckers, but the vessel was never permanently abandoned. Three steamers rendered valuable services to the vessel, & finally succeeded in getting her off the rocks & saving part of her cargo. The value of the vessel for the purposes of the action was taken to be £3,750. The ct. awarded £2,000 as salvage.—THE ERATO (1888), 13 P. D. 163; 57 L. J. P. 107; 59 L. T. 840; 6 Asp. M. L. C. 334.

6829. —— From insurrectionary troops.]—In Feb. 1920, pltfs., two British & two Belgian officers & twenty-three Belgian soldiers, were in Murmansk on their way to take service with the Govt. of Northern Russia, when a Bolshevik rising took place & the town & port of Murmansk fell into the hands of the Bolsheviks. Pltfs., who would have been imprisoned & probably shot if they had remained in Murmansk, could have escaped by sleigh to the Norwegian frontier, but they decided to escape by sea, &, if they could, to take with them one of the vessels lying in the harbour. Accordingly they boarded defts.' steamship L. which was still flying the mercantile flag of the Govt. of Northern Russia. Most of the vessels lying in the port had already hoisted the red flag in token of submission & many of them had been boarded by armed Bolsheviks. A number of the crew of the L. were on shore & there was insufficient steam in the boilers for her to proceed to sea. Pltfs., who brought two machine guns with them, cast off sufficient ropes to let the L. fall away from the quay, helped to raise steam, & returned the heavy fire from the quay & from other ships which had surrendered. In the course of the fighting three of pltfs. were wounded. The L. was thus enabled to effect her escape from Murmansk. Pltfs., with some assistance from the officers & crew of the L. then navigated her as far as Tromso, where pltfs. handed her over the representatives of the owners:—Held: although in saving the L. pltfs. were also effecting their own escape, they had other means of escape & were under no duty to save the L., &, therefore, were volunteers; the Bolsheviks were not acting with the authority of a politically organised & recognised society & the danger to the L. was not that of passing from the control of one form of govt. into the control of another, but was analogous to a rescue from pirates or mutineers; accordingly there was nothing in the comity of nations which compelled the ct. to treat the rescue as a rescue from lawful authority & pltfs. were entitled to salvage remuneration.—THE LOMONOSOFF, [1921] P. 97; 90 L. L. C. 251.

6833. —— Extinguishing fire at wharf.]—A fire broke out on board a vessel which was lying alongside a jetty at the entrance to a dock. The vessel was under repairs, with no steam up, & had no one but her master & a watchman on board. At the request of the master a steamship, which had just arrived, hove alongside, & getting her hose on board the burning vessel extinguished the fire which, if it had remained unchecked, would have caused very serious damage. The services were such as might have been rendered by a fire engine on shore. The value of the salved vessel was £9,500. Defts. tendered £200. The ct. upheld the tender, being of opinion that the services were not of such a character, as to require that the award should be assessed upon the same liberal principles as obtain in the ordinary cases of sea salvage rendered by one ship to another.—THE CITY OF NEWCASTLE (1894), 71 L. Two Norwegian barques, both bound to England, fell in with each other on the high seas, about 3,000 miles from Liverpool; one of the barques was in distress, her first mate having died, & her master, her second mate, & one of the crew being sick with yellow fever. The other barque was short handed, but her mate, with the consent of the master, went on board the distressed vessel & succeeded in navigating her to Liverpool. During the voyage, the master, the second mate, & two of the crew died. On the arrival of the vessel at Liverpool an action of salvage was instituted against her. At the hearing of the action, the value of the salved property was taken at £5,135 13*s.* 2*d.* The ct. awarded £600 to the mate who had gone on board the distressed vessel, £100 to the owners of the salving vessel, £50 to her master, & £150 amongst the remaining pltfs.—THE SKIBLADNER (1877), 3 P. effect, they, with the exception of those two, were entitled to a reward.

It seems to have been thought, that upon the ship breaking up & the cargo floating out of her, such cargo became derelict. . . . I am of opinion that this notion was wholly erroneous. The ship & cargo were, in the eye of the law, in the possession of the master, though he was not & could not be actually on board. 6868. ——.]—(1) When a pilot has assisted in navigating a vessel from a dangerous situation to a safe anchorage, the test whether he is entitled to be remunerated for salvage services, is not, on the one hand, whether the vessel was at the time of succour in distress, or, on the other hand, whether she was then damaged; but the test is whether the risk attending the services to the vessel was such that the pilot could not be reasonably expected to perform them for the ordinary pilot's fees, or even for extraordinary pilotage reward.

A vessel was, during a heavy storm, being driven to leeward towards dangerous sands; her captain was ignorant of the locality, & her loss appeared almost inevitable; some pilots, seeing her danger, put off to sea at the peril of their lives in order to assist her; they were unable to board her by reason of the height of the sea; but by preceding her & signalling to her, they guided her to a safe anchorage. The vessel had sustained no damage:—Held: the pilots were entitled to be remunerated for salvage services.

The passengers of the S. & a quantity of specie, which had formed part of the cargo of the S., having been taken on board the C., attempts were made by the master & crew of the C. to tow the S. into safety. These attempts were ineffectual, & ultimately, after the master & crew of the S. had gone on board the C. the S. was abandoned, & her passengers, master, & crew were landed in safety at an English port. Afterwards the specie was arrested in an action of salvage instituted at the suit of the owners, master, & crew of the C., who claimed in the action to recover for life salvage & for salvage services rendered to the S. & the specie. The owners of the specie appeared as defts., & served a notice on the owners of the S. calling upon them to contribute to the remuneration claimed by pltfs. Thereupon the owners of the S. appeared. At the hearing of the action the ct. awarded salvage remuneration to pltfs. for the services rendered, but reserved all questions as to the liability of the owners of the S. The owners of the specie then moved the ct. to declare that such portion of the sum awarded as was awarded for life salvage ought to be recouped to the owners of the specie. The ct. refused the motion on the ground that no property belonging to the owners of the S. having been salved they could not be held personally liable to pay any portion of the sum awarded.

Admlty. Ct. is not bound ex debito justitiæ to admit such evidence or to decree in terms that a specific & ascertained amount shall be paid to salvors in respect of damages or costs caused by rendering salvage services, for he is not bound always to award a sum sufficient to indemnify a salvor. But the judge may in his discretion receive such evidence, & may, if it be proper under the circumstances, include an amount in respect of damages in his award. Having regard to the large value in the present case, the decree should be varied by awarding £1,000 to the shipowners for the actual services rendered, & by referring the costs of repairs to, & of the detention of, the salvor's steamer to be ascertained by the registrar & merchants, unless applts. were willing that the decree of the ct. below should stand; (2) (BAGGALLAY & LINDLEY, L.JJ.) where salvage services have occasioned salvors serious pecuniary loss, & where the value of the ship & cargo saved is ample not only to defray loss sustained by a salvor, in addition to a proper sum for the master & crew, & also to leave a substantial surplus for the owner of the property saved, the salvor should be remunerated where possible with a sum sufficient to reward him for the risk & labour & to cover damages & expenses incurred through rendering the service, & evidence of the damages & expenses ought to be received by the judge, so that they may be ascertained with precision. The present case should be determined as stated by BRETT, M.R.

However strenuous those efforts, however heroic, still if unsuccessful they go unrewarded. . . . Another circumstance to be considered is the importance of so remunerating salvors as to make it worth their while to succour ships in distress (LINDLEY, L.J.).—THE CITY OF CHESTER (1884), 9 P. Pltfs. claimed salvage. The evidence was that if the ship had been allowed to sink in deep water portions of the cargo could have been saved with approximately the same monetary result:—Held: as the cargo where the salvors left it was not worth more than it would have been if the salvage service had not been performed, pltfs. were not entitled to any award.

Semble: a tug engaged to tow a vessel, in taking on board the crew of the vessel after a collision, is not so far acting outside the scope of her employment as to entitle the owners, master & crew of the tug to an award for life salvage.—THE TARBERT, [1921] P. 372; 90 L. A tug steamer having also tried in vain to tow her off, a large passenger steamer was sent from Folkestone Harbour, & succeeded in moving her from the rocks, & towing her for a few minutes, when the hawser having broken, she drifted ashore, & became a wreck. The cargo was saved to the value of £9,657. The defence that no salvage reward was due, as the service had been unsuccessful, not sustained. Award of £450 to the smaller vessels, & £250 to the steamer.

The first claim is on behalf of three small vessels. . . . The service was not long, nor in itself very successful in the issue, but they rendered all the assistance their means would allow; &, as I think, with risk & danger to themselves. I shall allot to them the sum of £450. . . . All the hazard of life fell on the first set of salvors (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE SANTIPORE (1854), 1 Ecc. & Ad. 231; 164 E. R. 134.

Wilful or criminal misconduct on the part of salvors, if clearly proved, may work entire forfeiture of salvage reward. Mere mistake or misconduct other than criminal, occasioning loss or expense to the owners of the property salved, will not work a forfeiture, but only a diminution of reward.

The amount of salvors' reward may be affected by the mistake or misconduct of an agent, such as the master of a steam tug employed by them to assist, if thereby loss or expense has been occasioned to the owners of the property salved; but, semble, only on the ground that the fund of payment has suffered diminution.

Two smacks found a schooner derelict at sea & towed her towards Yarmouth. At some distance from the harbour the smacksmen engaged a steam tug. By mistake or misconduct on the part of the master of the tug, the schooner in entering the harbour got aground; the smacksmen went in search of assistance; in their temporary absence other salvors took possession of the schooner & got her off. Suits were brought in the Admlty. Ct. on behalf of both sets of salvors; the judge of the Admlty. Ct. allowed salvage to the second salvors only:—Held: the first set of salvors were also entitled to salvage reward.

There can be no doubt that if by the imprudence or unskilfulness of the agent the value of the property be diminished, the principal, however innocent, or however meritorious as to his own acts, must suffer for it in the diminished amount of his compensation. But when the moral considerations & the considerations of policy, which enter largely into the law of salvage, are taken into account: when also it is remembered in how many instances the salvor cannot select his agent, but is bound to accept on the spur of the moment such offers of service as tend apparently to expedite or secure the completion of the salvage; & also in how many instances the agent's conduct is entirely beyond the control or direction of the principal—it may perhaps be found that even the limited amount of responsibility just stated may almost exceed the extent warranted by sound policy or strict justice (SIR JOHN COLERIDGE).—

6914. —— ——.]—A steamship valued at £27,000, from Philadelphia to Bremen, with a part cargo of petroleum belonging to the owners of the steamship, of the value of £7,578, the rest naphtha valued at £7,000, & freight at risk £1,743, became disabled so that she would not steer when about 1,000 miles from Falmouth. After making some progress to the eastward, she was fallen in with by steamship No. 1, the master of which agreed to attempt to get her to Fayal; but, owing to very bad weather, after standing by & steering her for a few miles, he left the disabled vessel. She was then picked up by steamship No. 2, & towed 265 miles, when, owing to damage to the machinery of the salving vessel & the hawser parting, the disabled steamer was lost sight of. Steamship No. 3 then came up; but after a difficult towage of about 12 miles left her owing to being short of feed for the horses she was carrying. Steamship No. 4 then established communication with her, & towed her 468 miles to Falmouth being accompanied by steamship No. 5, which belonged to the same owners as the disabled vessel, & acted as a standby in case of emergency. In consolidated actions of salvage by the owners, masters, & crews of the five steamships:—Held: steamship No. 1 was entitled to £800 by way of payment for work done in standing by &, at request, attempting to tow, within the principle laid down in The Benlarig, No. 6903, ante; steamship No. 2 was entitled to a salvage award af £2,500 for having, within the principle laid down in The Atlas, No. 6912, ante, & The Camellia, No. 6917, post, meritoriously contributed to the ultimate safety of the disabled vessel, the award being fixed at a lower standard than that to which the principal salvor was entitled, as the part taken by this salvor by itself would not have produced the successful result; that steamship No. 3 was, on similar grounds, & as having brought the disabled steamer within sight of the principal salvor, entitled to an award of £800; steamship No. 4, having towed the disabled steamer into a port of safety, was entitled, as the principal salvor, to an award of £4,000; whilst the owners of steamship No. 5 were entitled, as against the naphtha cargo, to an award of £300, & her master & crew, as against ship, cargo & freight, to an award of £150, making a total of £8,550.—THE AUGUST KORFF, [1903] P. 166; 72 L. After the V. had towed the C. from 8.10 p.m. to 7.45 a.m. the hawser broke, & owing to the danger to the cattle on board the V. would not take the C. again in tow. By the services of the V. the C. was brought 10 to 14 miles nearer her proper track, & towed 85 miles on her course, & thus brought into greater comparative safety. The C. subsequently arrived safely at Queenstown:—Held: the V. was entitled to some salvage reward, & she was accordingly awarded £200.

Services which contribute to the ultimate safety of a vessel in distress, if interrupted before completion without default of the salvors, are entitled to some remuneration, not only where a vessel has been saved from a position of imminent peril, but also in a case where the vessel is brought into a position of greater comparative safety than that in which she was when she asked for assistance.—THE CAMELLIA (1884), 9 P. A ship parted from both anchors at the North Foreland, & thereupon engaged a steamer to go on shore & bring off an anchor & chain. The steamer went to Ramsgate, &, as the best method of executing the service, got the anchor & chain on board two luggers; & the three vessels were engaged for three days looking for the ship in distress. The steamer at length fell in with the ship, but no longer in a condition of imminent distress, & then towed her to Gravesend. The luggers did not arrive with the anchor & chain until the ship had arrived at Gravesend, when the master of the ship refused to accept them :—Held : the original order to the steamer included a direction to take all necessary measures to carry out the order, & the steamer & the luggers were entitled to salvage remuneration for the whole of their efforts.

Salvors who volunteer, go out at their own risk for the chance of earning reward, & if they labour unsuccessfully, they are entitled to nothing ; the effectual performance of salvage service is that which gives them a title to salvage remuneration. But if men are engaged by a ship in distress, whether generally or particularly, they are to be paid according to their efforts made, even though the labour & service may not prove beneficial to the vessel (DR. 6946. —— Actual interruption of towage not essential.]—A steam tug entered into a contract to tow a ship at sea into the port of Liverpool for £45. During the performance of the service a hurricane arose, & the vessels were in serious danger. The tug, at great peril to herself, continued to tow the ship during the hurricane, & by so doing prevented the ship drifting upon a lee shore. The wind soon afterwards moderated, & the tug, still continuing to tow the ship, brought her into the port of Liverpool in safety :—Held : the tug was entitled to salvage reward.

The criterion by which it is to be ascertained whether a vessel under contract to tow has become a salvor is, whether supervening circumstances have occurred such as to justify her in abandoning the contract of towage ; & in order to justify her in abandoning the contract of towage, there must be among the supervening circumstances an element of serious danger, which was not in the contemplation of the parties at the time they entered into the contract.

A tug under contract to tow a ship into port may be entitled to salvage reward for bringing the ship into port, although nothing has occurred to occasion an actual interruption to the towage.—THE I. Many circumstances, it is obvious, may arise in the course of such employment, which may convert the service into the character of a salvage service. As for example, where the ship in tow is disabled in her hull or rigging, or where she is aground, or where the service itself is necessarily attended with danger, or extraordinary labour to the towing vessel (DR. Whilst pltfs.' tug was, under the direction of the pilot, turning the ship round, in order to enter the dock, stern first, the tow rope of another tug fast on the ship's quarter parted, &, through the effect of the wind & tide, the ship touched the ground. Pltfs.' tug, by the direction of the pilot, then shifted her position, & proceeded to tow the ship into dock bow first. In so doing the ship came off. Pltfs. claimed salvage remuneration, alleging that their tug had rescued defts.' ship from a position of danger:—Held: pltfs. were not entitled to salvage remuneration, as the ship was not in any immediate danger, & the tug had not run any risk or performed any duty or rendered any services beyond what, in the contemplation of the parties, was reasonably to be expected of her during the continuance of the towage contract.

To entitle passengers to reward for civil salvage, there must be a voluntary remaining on board, accompanied with extraordinary exertions on behalf of the ship. Salvage service may be performed by the seamen of the ship salved, when an abandonment of her has put an end to their original contract.

Passengers voluntarily remaining on board a vessel injured by a collision, & working at the pumps:—Held: not entitled to salvage.

A master cannot be a salvor so long as he is performing his duties as master under his contract; nor can a mariner until his contract is at an end; nor can a steam tug under a contract go tow make a title to salvage, unless, unforeseen danger arising, she performs different services from those stipulated for in the original contract. With respect to a passenger, there is no engagement on his part to perform any service, but there is a contract between him & the shipowner that for a certain money payment the ship shall convey him & his property to the place of destination. To a certain extent therefore he is bound up with the ship (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE VREDE (1861), Lush. 322; 30 L. J. P. M. & A. 209; 167 E. R. 143.

(2) Subsequently, at the request of those on board the ship, the tugs towed so as to keep the ship from slipping off the rocks on which she had grounded, & so enabled cargo to be saved, & freight to be earned:—Held: this was a salvage service for which the tugs were entitled to remuneration.—THE MADRAS, [1898] P. 90; 67 L. The two tugs in attendance on the steamer towed that vessel clear of the barque, & thereby the three tugs in attendance on the barque were enabled to pull that vessel off the sand. In a salvage suit commenced by the five tugs against the owners of the barque:—Held: the three tugs which were in attendance on the barque were entitled to salvage, as their services, for the time being, were outside their towage contract, but the claim against the barque, made by the two tugs in attendance on the steamer, must be disallowed, as there was no evidence from which a constructive acceptance of their services by the master of the barque could be inferred within the principle laid down in The Vandyck, No. 6850, ante.—THE EMILIE GALLINE, [1903] P. 106; 72 L. under a contract of towage, came into collision with a third vessel, & the tug & tow were found to blame, the negligence of the tug being that of her master. After the collision the tug towed the sailing vessel in her damaged condition to the nearest port of safety, & the owners, master, & crew of the tug claimed salvage:—Held: the tow having been placed in a difficulty by the joint negligence of tug & tow, the tug could not claim salvage for services afterwards rendered in extricating the tow from that difficulty, for the claim of the owners of the tug was barred by reason of the negligence of their agent, the master, having in part caused the mischief from the consequences of which the tow was rescued; the claim of the master was barred by reason of his being the party actually guilty of the negligence in part causing the mischief, & the claim of the crew was also barred in Admlty. on the ground of public policy, which rendered it undesirable to encourage a crew to hope to recover salvage in respect of services to be rendered to a vessel damaged through the contributory negligence of their master.—THE DUC D'AUMALE (No. 2), [1904] P. 60; 73 L. The vessels met with bad weather & pltfs.' tug did but little towing, & when eight days out in the Bay of Biscay, the master & crew of the steamship abandoned her & left in the other tug for a neighbouring port. Pltfs.' tug then towed the abandoned steamship to Falmouth, & thence with the assistance of the other tug to the Tyne:—Held: owing to the abandonment, the contract came to an end by the fault of defts., & pltfs. were entitled to a quantum meruit for their services till the abandonment, & to salvage reward for their subsequent services.—THE GLENMORVEN, [1913] P. 141; 82 L. J. P. 113; 29 T. L. R. 412.

6993. Of damaged state of tow.]—The master of a brig, which had suffered considerable damage, without mentioning this fact, agreed with the master of a steam tug for ordinary towage to London for £40. During the service the master of the tug discovered the fact of such previous damage, repudiated the agreement, & brought a suit for salvage:—Held: (1) additional salvage cannot be engrafted on an agreement for extraordinary though it may upon one for ordinary towage; (2) the mere concealment of a fact which might operate on the service & therefore on the agreement, vitiates it; (3) in this case the facts concealed might operate on the service by rendering it longer & more arduous, & the agreement was invalid.—THE KINGALOCK (1854), 1 Ecc. & Ad. 263; 18 Jur. 409; 164 E. ## SECT. 5.—PILOTAGE AND SALVAGE.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

6995. Salvage & pilotage contrasted.]—(1) Distinction between pilotage & salvage. Pilotage is confined to conducting into port a vessel in no state of distress or alarm, or having no apprehension of distress arising from antecedent causes. The scale of remuneration to pilots has been calculated on such definition.

(2) A pilot is not bound to take charge of a vessel which requires more than ordinary pilotage; & if he gives other assistance to a vessel in any way distressed, it is salvage, meriting, according to the circumstances, salvage remuneration.—THE ELIZABETH (1844), 3 L. T. O. S. 40; 8 Jur. 365.

Annotation:—Generally, Consd. Akerblom v. Price (1881), 44 L. T. 837.

6996. ——.]—(1) The claims of pilots & salvors stand on different grounds, & their services are paid for on different principles.

A pilot is entitled to what may be deemed a quasi monopoly; if there is one on the coast, he must be employed. He has no right to be engaged in any other occupation, & he is paid not in conformity with the nature of the service which he performs, but in conformity with the draught of the vessel; & I must assume that this rate of pay is sufficient: but salvors, who are not pilots, stand in a very different predicament. There is no legal obligation on them to go on board, & they are entitled to be paid not merely as a pilot, for their services, but also for any loss they may sustain in the employment of the vessel (DR. LUSHINGTON).

(2) Ignorance of the locality, though in the case of a foreign master, is, under certain circumstances, no defence against a claim for salvage, but the reverse.—THE CUMBERLAND (1845), 9 Jur. 191.

SUB-SECT. 2.—RIGHT TO REWARD.

A. In General.

6997. General rule—No right to salvage reward.]—The safe conduct of a ship into a port, under circumstances of extreme danger & personal exertion, may exalt a pilotage service into something of a salvage service. But in general they are distinguishable enough, & the pilot, though he contributes to the safety of the ship, is not to claim as a legal salvor (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE JOSEPH HARVEY (1799), 1 Ch. Rob. 306; 165 E. R. 186.

7004. ——.]—It is not in the interests, either of shipowners & their navigating servants, or of the pilots themselves, to give any countenance to the idea that a pilot, compulsorily in charge of a disabled vessel, may easily convey himself into a salvor.

Defts.' steamship, on a voyage from the Tyne to Marseilles, lost her propeller in the neighbourhood of the Royal Sovereign lightship, &, drifting up channel, was brought to anchor off Rye after bumping several times; but without sustaining material damage. In answer to flares the Winchelsea lifeboat went out to her, & then a tug, which came up, was sent to fetch another tug. The two tugs, with the assistance, later on, of a third, proceeded to tow the vessel up channel, &, off Dungeness, a compulsory pilot boarded her, & took charge of the vessel to Gravesend. Defts. admitted that salvage services had been rendered by the three tugs & by the crew of the lifeboat; but denied the right of the pilot to claim remuneration on salvage terms:—Held: the claim of the pilot must be disallowed, but, in the circumstances, without costs, for though the vessel was disabled, &, in consequence, sheered heavily in the bad weather prevailing, &, whilst in charge of the pilot, the hawser of one of the tugs fouled an anchor of defts.' vessel, & there was some apprehension of risk from leakage, still the pilot had not been required to do, & had not in fact done, anything more than ought to be done by a pilot performing his ordinary pilotage work for pilotage reward.—THE BEDEBURN, [1914] P. 146; 83 L. J. P. 109; 111 L. T. 464; 30 T. L. R. 513; 12 Asp. M. L. C. 530.

The merits of the passenger in saving the ship were acknowledged by the owner in a letter to one of the underwriters, wherein he expressed his desire to make him a compensation:—Held: the passenger was entitled to sue the owner for salvage.

(2) Suppose a tempest should arise while the pilot is on board, & he should go off in a boat to the shore to fetch hands, & should risk his life for the safety of the ship in a manner different from that which his duty as a pilot required: in such case it seems to me that he would be entitled to a compensation in the nature of salvage (LORD ALVANLEY, C.J.).—NEWMAN v. WALTERS (1804), 3 Bos. & P. 612; 127 E. (2) Application of the rule, respecting pilots' claiming as salvors, to foreign vessels—THE KING OSCAR (1848), 6 Notes of Cases, 284.

7015. —— —— ——.]—The case set up is exaggerated, & a fraudulent attempt to extort salvage from a foreigner. I am satisfied upon the whole of the evidence that this is not a case of salvage, but a mere case of pilotage. In all cases where a real & bonâ fide case of salvage is made out, the ct. is in duty bound, & it is its inclination as well as its duty, to allot a liberal reward, to encourage the rendering assistance to vessels in distress. A liberal allowance for services of this kind is not only for the general interests of commerce & the service of navigation, but for the benefit of underwriters. But, on the other hand, if licenced pilots, to whom the Legislature has given special privileges & exclusive rights, no other person being allowed to act as a pilot within certain limits, lend themselves to attempts at extortion upon foreigners, it is the duty of the ct. to repress them (SIR JOHN NICHOLL).—THE JOHANNES (1848), 6 Notes of Cases, 288, n.

The steamship had been on the sands near the Kentish Knock lightship, but had got off with some damage to her rudder, & had a signal for a pilot hoisted. The master of the smack boarded the steamship & piloted her to the entrance of Harwich harbour:—Held: the owners, master, & crew of the fishing smack were entitled to salvage remuneration.

7021. —— —— Towing damaged ship.]—(1) The amount of salvage, for services performed with risk & labour, in the English Channel, by a pilot & his crew, five in number, from Jan. 16 to Jan. 18, was, on a bond of reference to Comrs. of Pilots at Cowes, fixed, on a value of £2,000, at 120 guineas & the expenses: the owner having refused payment, the same sum was, in an action by the salvors decreed with costs.

(2) The amount of remuneration must depend on all the circumstances. It is not a mere question of work & labour, not a mere calculation of hours, though time undoubtedly is an ingredient; but there are various facts for consideration; the state of the weather, the degree of damage & danger as to the ship & cargo, the risk & peril of the salvors, the time employed, the value of the property; & when all these are considered, there is still another principle, to encourage enterprise, reward exertion, & to be liberal in all that is due to the general interests of commerce, & the general benefit of owners & underwriters, even though the reward may fall upon an individual owner with some severity (SIR JOHN NICHOLL).

It is true, boarding is part of a pilot's duty; what, then, is the nature of the service rendered? It is not pilotage. 7031. ——.]—(1) The exceptions to the general rule that a pilot cannot claim as a salvor, ought to be few & well defined. The services of a pilot cannot easily be converted into those of a salvor. The same rule of law applies to a licenced waterman when acting as a pilot.

A Dutch barque was riding at anchor off Deal, & waiting to proceed down Channel, & a waterman who, though not a licenced pilot, was in the habit of piloting vessels, was taken on board her, under an arrangement whereby he was to receive 7*s.* a day, with £5 in addition for navigating the vessel as pilot until she arrived off Beachy Head. The day after the waterman came on board, & whilst the barque was still at anchor, a gale came on, & the tempestuous state of the weather caused the vessel to drive, & rendered it necessary to slip the chain, when, under the direction of the waterman, the vessel was taken through the Gull Stream & brought up in safety in Margate Roads. In a salvage suit instituted on behalf of the waterman & other persons who had rendered services to the vessel, the ct. held that the services rendered by the waterman were within the scope of his contract, & he was not entitled to claim as a salvor.

It ought to be well understood that the services of a pilot are not slightly to be converted into salvage services (SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE).

(2) Taking out during bad weather an anchor & chain to a vessel which is compelled to slip her cable to get away from a dangerous position & run for a place of safety, is, although the anchor & chain in the result are not needed, a salvage service.—THE ÆOLUS (1873), L. 7033. —— ——.]—In an action for salvage it appeared that on Mar. 20, about 11 a.m., pltfs.' fishing smack fell in with defts.' vessel, which was showing an English Jack flag in her rigging, in the North Sea, 40 miles from Lowestoft. The crew of the vessel were suffering from frost bite, the helmsman in consequence steering with one hand. They were also short of provisions. They told the master of the smack that they wished to be piloted to the nearest port, the vessel being at this time out of pilotage waters, & he agreed to take & took the vessel to Great Yarmouth:—Held: even assuming that the signal exhibited by defts.' vessel was ambiguous, the assistance rendered to her was in the circumstances a salvage service, & pltfs. were entitled to remuneration accordingly.

The services have been rendered by a man who is not a pilot & in waters which are non-pilotage waters, & though they may be in the nature of pilotage, they are, in fact, salvage services (HANNEN, P.).—THE AGLAIA (1888), 13 P. 7035. General rule—Personal service necessary.]—Under the general rule, that a person not actually occupied in effecting a salvage service is not entitled to share in a salvage remuneration, the claim of an officer of a coast guard detachment, who sent his men & boat, but did not assist in person, rejected.

The exception to this rule . . . is in favour of owners of vessels, which, in rendering assistance, have either been diverted from their proper employment, or have experienced a special mischief, occasioning to the owners some inconvenience & loss, for which an equitable compensation may reasonably be claimed (LORD STOWELL).—THE VINE (1825), 2 Hag. But this is only when the value of the advice given is simply & merely the value which belongs to pilotage. It is another case, if a ship be beleaguered with concealed & manifold dangers, & by a prompt & courageous effort, information is brought out from land, in consequence of which fatal mistakes & rash counsels on the part of the endangered ship are anticipated & prevented, & the way of safety first opened to the crew.—THE HEBE (1849), 7 Notes of Cases, Supp. 1.—IR.

Right to reward.]—(1) A ship, abandoned at sea, was taken possession of by a small schooner, & after being towed some time by the schooner, was boarded by several men from The President steamer, who took possession of her & towed her into Liverpool. The action on behalf of The President was entered in the names of certain persons, who, being the underwriters of the ship & cargo, hired the steamer for the purpose of salving The Pickwick:—Held: the schooner was entitled to salvage as first salvor; the steamer, looking to the danger of the ship, & the small size of the schooner, was justified in taking possession of the ship; & the persons hiring the steamer were entitled to salvage as owners for the time.

When once salvors are in possession, they are not to be dispossessed by a subsequent act, unless there be reasonable cause. The second set of salvors must show that there was no fair probability that the vessel could be brought into port in safety in due time by the first set; but it would be most injurious to mercantile interests if the principle was carried to an extreme extent (DR. The agreement contained a proviso that nothing contained in the agreement should prejudice or affect the rights of the steam tug cos. in regard to services in saving ships or other property to be rendered by their steamers.

One of the steam tugs specified, belonging to one of the cos., in pursuance of a direction received from the mate of the landing stage, who was a servant of the Dock Board, towed out a lifeboat to a vessel in distress, & brought the master & crew into Liverpool; then returned & brought the ship & cargo in also.

A. In General.

7078. General rule—Service must be voluntary.]—The crew of a ship cannot be considered as salvors. What is a salvor? A person who, without any particular relation to a ship in distress, proffers useful service, & gives it as a volunteer adventurer, without any pre-existing covenant that connected him with the duty of employing himself for the preservation of that ship; not so the crew, whose stipulated duty it is, to be compensated by payment of wages, to protect that ship through all perils, & whose entire possible service for this purpose is pledged to that extent. . . . The crew never claim as joint salvors, although they have contributed as much as, & perhaps more than, the volunteer salvors themselves. . . . In a salvage case you must take into consideration the quantum of personal danger incurred, the value of the property saved, . . . whereas the rule of wages presents only a stipulated sum which in no case can be exceeded. . . . On all views of the relative justice between the parties & of the public policy of convenience, there can be no doubt that the rule of wages has the advantage upon the clearest grounds; but take it upon the most naked principles of law applying to it, the contract covers the whole ship, one part as well as another, with the mariners' lien. A part separated by a storm is not disengaged by that accident from that lien (LORD STOWELL).—THE NEPTUNE (1824), 1 Hag. Adm. 227; 166 E. R. 81.

7079. —— ——.]—A German steamship was wrecked in British waters, & the lives of ten passengers & of some of her crew were saved by certain boats. Subsequently, divers employed by the owners of cargo in the steamship succeeded in recovering from the wreck a large amount of specie. A cause of salvage was instituted on behalf of the owners, masters, & crews of the boats against the owners of the specie:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to be paid salvage remuneration out of the proceeds of the specie.

Let us first consider whether this specie was when it was raised from the bottom of the sea "wreck." . . . It was not "wreck" in the common law meaning of the word. . . .

An action in personam might, under certain circumstances, be maintained in the Admlty. Ct. for salvage. . . . Salvage is the service which volunteer adventurers spontaneously render to the owners in the recover of property from loss or damage at sea, under the responsibility of making restitution & with a lien for their reward (BRETT, L.J.).

The liability to pay a reasonable amount of salvage to life salvors is imposed upon owners of cargo as well as upon owners of the ship, & that such liability is not a general personal liability to be enforced in any circumstances whether the ship & cargo are lost or not, but a liability limited to 7086. Right to reward.] — The ct. always jealously maintains the right of original salvors, unless further assistance is necessary for the preservation of the property. In a case of derelict & of great merit, the ct. gave to the original salvors, the usual salvage two-fifths of, the whole value, £2,394, & to a revenue cutter, whose assistance was beneficial, £100. Expenses out of the remaining property.—THE CHARLOTTA (1831), 2 Hag. Adm. 361; 166 E. R. 275.

7087. ——.]—In an action entered in Nov., for salvage rendered in Apr., by a lieutenant of a coastguard station, & four of his boatmen, a tender of £50 pronounced for; & the salvors, who were resident out of the jurisdiction of the ct., being condemned in £50 nom. exp., the sum paid into the registry, by the owners as the tender, was directed to be paid out to them in discharge of costs.

Salvage is not always a mere compensation for work & labour. . . . The interests of commerce, the benefit & security of navigation, & lives of the seamen, render it proper to estimate a salvage reward upon a more enlarged & liberal scale. The ingredients of a salvage service are first, enterprise in the salvors in going out in tempestuous weather to assist a vessel in distress, risking their own lives to save their fellow creatures, & to rescue the property of their fellow subjects; secondly, the degree of danger & distress from which the property is rescued—whether it were in imminent peril & almost certainly lost if not at the time rescued & preserved; thirdly, the degree of labour & skill which the salvors incur & display, & the time occupied. Lastly, the value. Where all these circumstances concur, a large & liberal reward ought to be given; but where none or scarcely any take place, the compensation can hardly be denominated a salvage compensation; it is little more than a mere remuneration pro opere et labore (SIR JOHN NICHOLL).—THE CLIFTON (1834), 3 Hag. 7091. General rule—Right to reward dependent on termination of contract of service.]—(1) A ship was, by order of her master, abandoned at sea, & on the next day her crew, who had been taken to Vigo, were, by order of the British Consul, put on board a steamer, which fell in with the abandoned ship. Part of the crew volunteered to return to their ship, but without the master, & were accordingly put on board by the steamer; &, with the assistance of a smack & other boats, the ship was subsequently brought to Corunna:—Held: the crew were entitled to be rewarded as salvors.

The mate of the barque remained on board her, & navigated her until he obtained assistance from a steam vessel. The steam vessel then took the barque in tow & brought her into port in safety, the mate still assisting in her navigation:—Held: in awarding salvage to the owners, master, & crew of the steam vessel, the right of the mate of the damaged ship to claim salvage reward for his services, should be taken into consideration, & the mate, upon his claim being brought before the ct., was entitled to rank as a salvor.

(2) In the first place, the salvors claim for a sum of £108 16s., which was paid by them for pumping & other expenses incurred in dock at Hull. That sum must either be paid as part of the salvage reward or independently of that reward. It cannot be paid in both ways. I consider that it must be paid independently of salvage (SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE).

(3) I adhere, as DR. LUSHINGTON did in The Warrior, No. 7099, post, to the doctrine laid down by LORD STOWELL in The Neptune, No. 7078, ante, that the crew of a salved vessel cannot, under ordinary circumstances, have a persona standi as salvors against their own vessel. That principle, I consider, should be maintained in its integrity, but the crew of a salved vessel may, by the acts of their master, be placed in such a position that the engagement they have entered into is at an end. DR. LUSHINGTON, in The Warrior, No. 7099, post, said, "But there are two ways in which the contract of seamen may be dissolved. It may be dissolved by final abandonment of the ship, or by the act of the master giving the seamen a discharge." In this case, the master abandoned his vessel with all his crew, except the mate, who voluntarily stayed on board, & the mate's contract with the master, to serve in that capacity, must be considered as at an end (SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE).—THE LE JONET (1872), L. The master of defts.' vessel, thinking she was in danger of sinking as the result of a collision, gave orders to abandon ship, & he & the crew went on board a pilot cutter which was standing by. Shortly afterwards he came to the conclusion that the vessel was not sinking & called for volunteers to return to her. About half the crew, including pltfs., the second officer & seven other hands, responded & returned to the vessel & navigated her while she was towed in shore & beached:—Held: pltfs.' contract of service had not been determined by the temporary abandonment & pltfs. were not entitled to salvage.—THE PORTREATH, [1923] P. 155; 92 L. (2) An abandonment of a ship, which is relied upon as operating a dissolution of the seamen's contract, must be clearly proved.

(3) If, upon a ship being wrecked, the master, improperly disregarding the interests of the owners of ship & cargo, discharges the seamen, the discharge is nevertheless valid, unless the seamen are proved to have fraudulently accepted their discharge; & subsequent services rendered by them to ship & cargo are salvage services.

A ship by accident in calm weather went on a rocky beach in the Canary Islands, beat heavily, & in half an hour filled with water; the master & crew immediately quitted the ship & went on shore. The next day the master discharged all the officers & crew; but it was not proved that they were guilty of fraud in accepting their discharge. On same day some of the crew, at the suggestion of the mate, returned to the ship; &, working for several days, succeeded in saving part of the ship's stores & a considerable amount of cargo; the ship then broke up:—Held: there was no abandonment terminating the seamen's contract, but the contract was terminated by the discharge given by the master; &, for their subsequent services, the seamen were entitled to salvage reward.—THE WARRIOR (1862), Lush. 476; 6 L. 7121. ——.]—A large steamship belonging to defts., laden with sugar from Java to Port Said for orders was coaled at Colombo by pltfs., who acted in the usual way as ship's agents. A few days afterwards the vessel grounded on Gofar Island in the Maldives & remained fast. Her master sent the chief officer back to Colombo with a letter to pltfs. acquainting them with the situation, telling them that he wanted a powerful tug, & that they were to draw on defts., the owners of the ship, for disbursements. He also suggested that a contract for a salvage boat, "No cure, no pay," might be advisable. Pltfs., finding that the latter proposition was impracticable, engaged a Govt. tug at a rate working out at about £60 a day, &, making themselves personally liable for the payment of the hire, insured the tug for a limited period. The tug proceeded to the vessel with a representative of pltfs. on board. The master, doubting whether his vessel could be got off, declined to accept the services of the tug except on a "No cure, no pay," agreement, & accordingly, after some discussion with pltfs.' representative as to terms, the master signed a letter agreeing on behalf of defts. to pay pltfs. £4,000 if the vessel was successfully floated. The tug then made fast, &, in the course of the next day's towage, the vessel came off. Pltfs. claimed £4,000:—Held: pltfs. could not be allowed to ratify the act of their representative, as, in the circumstances, the substituted agreement, insisted upon by the master & assented to by their representatives, by which they were constituted salvors, was unreasonable, & pltfs. must be deemed, not only when engaging the tug, but throughout the operations, to have acted as agents of the ship. In that capacity they were only entitled to recover by personal action repayment of their disbursements, together with the usual agency charges.—THE CRUSADER, [1907] P. 196; 76 L. J. P. 102; 97 L. The ct. will not encourage such suits; &, considering on the one hand that the salvage service proved was of a very trifling nature, & greatly exaggerated in the statement of the salvors; on the other, that the owners by going into irrelevant matter had needlessly prolonged the proceedings, gave only £80 as salvage, but gave the salvors their costs.—THE SAPPHO (1857), Sw. 242; 8 L. (2) The duty cast by Merchant Shipping Acts upon one of two colliding vessels to stand by & render assistance does not prevent that vessel, if she renders assistance, from claiming salvage.

In a collision, which occurred in the Bristol Channel between the S. & the M. on a foggy morning in Dec. 1916, the S. struck the M. on her starboard side & made a large hole in her, with the result that the engine room & one of the holds filled with water. The master of the M. believing that he was in immediate danger of sinking, he & most of the crew climbed on to the S., & the rest of the crew boarded the U., an armed steam trawler which was escorting the S. As the M. did not sink, the master of the S. proposed, with the assistance of the U., to tow her to Barry, & the crew of the M. returned to her & lashed her to the S. on the starboard side & to the U. on the port side. After towing for three-quarters of an hour all three vessels inadvertently grounded on a ledge of rocks near the shore. The S. & the U. got off soon after & left the M. on the rocks. When the tide fell the water in the M. drained out of her, & the master, by closing a watertight door between the hold & the engine room, was able to prevent the water coming into the hold. Both the S. & the M. were badly damaged by the grounding. The M. was successfully towed to Barry by two tugs on the following day. Upon a claim for salvage by the owners of the S. for towing the M. BAILHACHE, J., acting on the advice of his assessors, decided that the towage had not materially contributed to the ultimate safety of the M. & dismissed the claim, but the Ct. of Appeal, on the advice of their assessors, came to the contrary conclusion:—Held: there was ample evidence to support the decision of the trial judge, & it ought not to be disturbed.—MELANIE (OWNERS) v. SAN ONOFRE (OWNERS), [1925] A. ## SECT. 7.—SALVAGE OF MARITIME PROPERTY.

SUB-SECT. 1.—VESSEL OR SHIP.

7137. What is—Drifting gas float.]—The jurisdiction of the Admlty. over salvage does not extend to all property exposed to perils of the sea, & used to assist navigation.

A gas float shaped like a boat, but neither intended nor fitted to be navigated, was moored in tidal waters to give light to vessels & went adrift in a storm:—Held: not being a ship or part of a ship or of her apparel or cargo the structure was not the subject of a claim for salvage within the Admlty. jurisdiction.

It may be that in salvage law a broad & liberal construction should be extended to the word "cargo," so as to embrace goods in course of being transported by a vessel though not inside it (LORD HERSCHELL).—WELLS v. GAS FLOAT WHITTON NO. 2 (OWNERS), [1897] A. A. finding it in that situation, voluntarily conveys it to a place of safety, beyond the reach of the tide, at high water. A. has no lien on the timber for the trouble or expense to which he may have put himself in the carriage of it, but is liable to an action of trover, unless he deliver it up to the owner on demand, though nothing be tendered him by the owner by way of compensation. But in such a case, in all probability, A. might maintain an action against the owner for a compensation.—NICHOLSON v. CHAPMAN (1793), 2 Hy. Bl. 254; 126 E. R. 536.

B. Necessity for Abandonment.

(a) In General.

7151. General rule—Abandonment must be without hope of recovery or return.]—(1) It is by no means necessary to constitute derelict, that no owner should afterwards appear. It is sufficient if there has been an abandonment at sea by the master & crew, without hope of recovery; I say, without hope of recovery because a mere quitting of the ship for the purpose of procuring assistance from shore, or with an intention of returning to her again, is not an abandonment (SIR W. SCOTT).

7173. General rule.]—The commander & crew of a vessel of war, upon the African station, held to be entitled to a salvage remuneration for putting a sailing master & two seamen on board a homeward bound merchant vessel to assist in navigating the vessel, the master & one of the mariners of the merchant vessel being invalided with fever, & incapable of discharging the duties on board. Deductions claimed by the owners for the value of the ship & cargo on account of freight, primage & insurance, disallowed.

The claim of the salvors extends over the ship, cargo & freight (DR. LUSHINGTON).

Upon the present occasion no dispute is raised between the owners of the ship & the owners of the cargo; & if the freight be deducted from the value of the cargo, it must be taken afterwards as a separate item, upon which the ct. must decree salvage (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE CHARLOTTE WYLIE (1846), 2 Wm. Rob. 495; 5 Notes of Cases, 4; 166 E. R. 842.

7174. ——.]—(1) Where salvors are embarked in a salvage service with the consent & sanction of the master of a stranded vessel, & are disturbed in their salvage operations, & are ousted from the vessel by persons illegally intruding themselves into the service, no salvage benefit can accrue to the parties so intruding themselves, for any portion of the ship & cargo they may save, but the same will accrue to the original salvors.

(2) The whole value of the property which has been rescued, according to the account sales, amounts to the sum of £1,888; from this sum, however, certain deductions are claimed by the owners on account of expenses incurred by them; & amongst the deductions they claim the expenses incurred by them in prosecuting an action which was successfully instituted against the wreckers, who took forcible possession of the ship & cargo. With respect to the expenses of this prosecution, I have no hesitation in saying that it can form no item of deduction in the case (DR. LUSHINGTON).

(3) Another item in the deductions claimed by the owners of the cargo is the sum of £229 paid by them on account of the freight. This sum I am also of opinion cannot be deducted in the present instance. It is clear that salvors, generally speaking, are entitled to salvage upon ship, cargo & freight; & as far as the owners of the cargo are concerned, it can, it appears to me, make no difference to them whether the salvage is taken from the freight itself or from the cargo as it is sold, which includes of course the value of the freight. So that supposing the owners of the cargo were compelled to pay this £229 on account of freight to the owners of the ship, as in the present instance, they will have to pay so much less for their portion of the salvage. With respect to the item of the insurance, I am of opinion that it does not form a proper subject of deduction (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE FLEECE (1850), 3 Wm. Rob. 278; 7 Notes of Cases, 534; 166 E. would not lie either as a salvage action simply or on the agreement.

There is one element invariably required by Admlty. law in order to found an action for salvage, there must be something saved more than life, which will form a fund from which salvage may be paid. T. 851; 2 Asp. M. L. C. 198.

7203. —— ——.]—Under a claim for life salvage, risk or serious apprehension of danger to the lives of those who have been rescued will entitle those rendering the services to life salvage, even if the lives of those rescued were not in actual danger. The pecuniary value of the life of any one saved cannot be taken into account. Where the services can be adequately recompensed by an inconsiderable sum, the huge value of the vessel & her cargo is not an element of importance.

In an action for salvage of life alone, it appeared that four tugs put out from Falmouth at night to render assistance to a large British steamship stranded off the Lizard, making signals of distress, & having on board nearly four hundred passengers, one hundred & forty crew, & a valuable general cargo.

Owing to the fog prevailing, & the strong wind & heavy ground swell, caution was necessary in getting to the vessel, &, on account of the rocks, the tugs were unable to approach close to her; but, at the request of the local lifeboats, which had already reached the vessel with the object of saving life, they took these boats in tow, & so enabled them, in the course of several trips, to land in safety the whole of the passengers & crew. Part of the vessel & part of her cargo were subsequently salved by other salvors:—Held: the owners, master, & crews of the tugs were entitled to an award of £800, for by expediting, at some risk to themselves, the transfer of the passengers from the ship to the shore, the tugs had assisted in saving life from actual, or serious apprehension of, danger.—THE SUEVIC, [1908] P. 154; 77 L. By the contract with the passengers defts. were "not liable for loss or delay from the act of God . . . perils of the seas, rivers, or navigation . . . or the wrongful act or default" of their servants. Defts.' vessel became a total loss, materials to the value of £335 only being saved. In an action in personam by the owners of the passing steamers for salvage, or, in the alternative, for remuneration for services rendered at request, defts. tendered £200:—Held: the tender must be upheld, as the passengers & crew were not in any danger, so that no life salvage was claimable; &, as defts. were under no obligation to forward the passengers to their destination, the master, in transhipping them, acted as the agent of the passengers & not of defts.—THE MARIPOSA, [1896] P. 273; 65 L. 7205. Cargo owners — Extent of liability.] — (1) The words "persons belonging to such ship" in Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), include passengers on board the ship, as well as the master & crew; & who, in respect to remuneration for life salvage, stand on the same footing as the master & crew.

(2) The owners of the cargo are liable to contribute to that portion of the claim of salvors which arises from saving the lives of passengers, although the salvors may have rendered no direct benefit to the cargo, as the benefit to property is not a criterion of remuneration for life salvage.

(3) The accident of the amount of salvage awarded exceeding the value of the salvage vessels is wholly immaterial, as the value of such vessels is not an element to detract from the value of the salvage service.

(4) The appellate ct. will not disturb an award of salvage by the ct. below, on the ground of that ct. having awarded too large a sum, unless they are satisfied, beyond all doubt, that the judge has made an exorbitant estimate of the salvage services.

(5) The general rule as to the parties liable to pay salvage is, that the property actually benefited is alone chargeable with the salvage recovered. C. Considerations Governing Salvage Agreements.

7216. Extent of danger—To property.]—Salvors agreed to assist a vessel for a stipulated sum; they afterwards refused to take that sum, upon the ground of their having been misinformed by the master as to the value of the cargo. There being no proof of fraud against the master, the agreement was upheld. Salvors are not entitled to stipulate for remuneration proportioned to the value of the cargo.

Where agreements are made at sea between masters & salvors the ct. will always be desirous of upholding them, if it can do so consistently with the ends of justice. The ct. would be very unwilling to disturb under ordinary circumstances an agreement, on account of the sum agreed on being too large or too small. . . . Both parties are fully capable of entering into a contract. The master is the representative of the owners, & the salvors are acting on their own behalf. They have ample means of ascertaining the state & condition of the vessel requiring assistance, & the nature & extent of the services to be performed, & the time they may occupy. It is very desirable that agreements of this kind should, when just & fair, be upheld by this ct. . . . If however fraud has been practised, it cannot be disputed that the ct. ought not to set the agreement aside. The onus probandi, however, must rest on those who impute the fraud. . . . I cannot assent to the proposition that by the value of the cargo the salvors are to determine the amount of the agreement. This ct. does, to a certain extent, take into consideration the value of the property saved in assessing salvage services, with the view of making the general rate of compensation sufficient to induce persons to undertake salvage services, &, as it were, to a certain extent, making up in cases of large value for the impossibility of giving a complete & adequate reward in cases of small value. Salvors are not entitled to make an agreement upon any other grounds than these—the extent of danger to which the property to be salved is exposed, the degree of labour they will have to under go, the risk to which they themselves may be exposed, & the length of time to be occupied; but they are not to speculate on the value of the cargo (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE HENRY (1851), 16 L. T. O. S. 553; 15 Jur. 183.

F. Burden of Proof.

7230. On party alleging existence of agreement.]—It has been alleged that the salvors bound themselves by an agreement with the master of The British Empire to accept a stipulated sum for their services. Now, the general principle with respect to such agreements I apprehend to be this, that it lies upon the party setting it up to prove two things; first, that such agreement was made; &, secondly, that it was just. Where there has been a definite distinct agreement, with ample time for the parties to consider what they are doing, the ct. will be reluctant to interfere with it, but only under these circumstances (per CUR.).—THE BRITISH EMPIRE (1842), 6 Jur. 608.

LUSHINGTON).

7234. ——.]—It is competent to the master of a ship to make an agreement with salvors as to the remuneration for their services, & if the agreement be consistent with justice & equity, it shall bind the owners.

In such a case the burden of proof is upon the parties alleging the agreement.

The masts of a ship had been cut away, & she was making a considerable quantity of water, but, being laden with timber, was in no danger of sinking. Salvors, five in number, with their fishing smack of 60 tons burthen, rendered her, for thirty-six hours, services which in effect amounted only to towage services. Their claim included £34 compensation for loss of fish, & £25 damage to hawser. The ct. found that an agreement had been made between them & the master of the ship, that they should receive £150 for their services, & the ct., considering the agreement to be just & equitable, pronounced for a tender to that effect, with costs. Value of the property saved, £1,850.

There may be as valid a verbal agreement in a case of salvage as if it had been reduced into the most formal shape (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE ARTHUR (1862), 6 L. T. 556; 1 Mar. L. C. 228.

Just after the expiration of that period, the hawser broke killing the chief officer of the first salvors, injuring two other persons & doing damage. The first salvors thereupon declined to render any further assistance, &, the attempt to get the engines to work having proved unsuccessful, a French mail steamer, the second salvors, which had in the meantime come up, towed the defts.' vessel 255 miles to a place of safety. At the trial defts. objected that no salvage services were rendered by the first salvors, that the towage was without benefit, & the sum claimed exorbitant:—Held: the agreement was not manifestly unfair or unjust, &, though defts. had derived no benefit, the stipulated service having been performed, the first salvors were entitled to the agreed sum of £500.

On motion on behalf of the master, mate, & boatswain for such an apportionment, as to the ct. should seem just, of the £1,000 less unrecovered costs, & for a declaration that appcts. were not bound by the articles to receive only the proportions of salvage set out therein against their respective names:—Held: as Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 182, did not prevent seamen entering into an equitable arrangement for the apportionment of salvage, therefore, though the trawler in question was not within s. 18 of the amending Act of 1862, the apportionment of salvage contemplated by the articles was not contrary to law, & being, in the opinion of the ct., equitable, was binding.

The fatigue, the anxiety, the determination to encounter danger, if necessary, the spirit of adventure, the skill & dexterity which are acquired by the exercise of that spirit, all require to be taken into consideration. What enhances the pretensions of salvors most is the actual danger which they have incurred. Her passengers & crew were transferred to the other vessel, & her distress being notified from the signal station, two steamers belonging to pltfs., of the value of £22,000 & £20,000 respectively, specially built, maintained, & equipped, with steam up night & day, for salvage purposes on the basis of no cure no pay, came out of the bay to the assistance of the sinking vessel. By lashing themselves one on each side of her they succeeded in keeping her up for two hours until they had beached her in Getares Bay, where the holes were temporarily patched by the divers carried by the salving steamers, & by means of their powerful pumping gear the water in the vessel was lessened until she floated, when she was towed to Gibraltar. The whole operations lasted three days, with the result, that by the admission of deft. owners of ship, freight, & cargo, this property, of the agreed value as salved, of £76,596, was saved from certain total loss:—Held: it was to the general interests of navigation that the ct. should by liberal rewards encourage the maintenance of powerful & efficient steamships kept in constant readiness to assist vessels in distress, &, considering this special element, & the condition in which the salved vessel was at the time together with the value of the salved & salving property, the skill displayed by the salvors, & the serious risk to their lives & property, the owners, masters, & crews of the two steamers were entitled, in equal moieties, to an award of £19,000.—THE GLENGYLE, [1898] P. 97; 67 L. It is true that the ship & cargo are of no great value, but in cases of steam boats, that is not the consideration: they are a very peculiar species of vessels, making large profits, & they are not merely to pay for services, as if only carrying ballast: humanity requires that every possible encouragement in the way of liberal reward should be given in order to induce a prompt & efficient assistance to them, & the reward must be beyond a mere proportion of value in ordinary cases (SIR JOHN NICHOLL).—THE ARDINCAPLE (1834), 3 Hag. In considering the perils, the possibility of assistance being rendered to the vessel in peril must be taken to lessen the amount to be awarded.

(2) The value of the salving ship will not substantially affect the amount of the reward, but the length of time to which she is exposed to additional risks is a material element for consideration.

(3) Having regard to the fact of the large number of passengers on the Werra . . . the reward to the salvors should be a liberal one (HANNEN, P.).—THE WERRA (1886), 12 P. D. 52; 56 L. J. P. 53; 56 L. T. 580; 35 W. R. 552; 6 Asp. M. L. C. 115.

(f) Services rendered to British Vessels by Foreigners.

7385. Whether ground for more liberal reward.]—(1) In cases of civil salvage, the Ct. of Admlty. does not recognise the rule of proportion, but awards as equitable remuneration for the service rendered, though such remuneration is more liberally allotted in cases of large value. Arbitrators having given one-fourth of the ship, viz. £600, the ct. awarded out of the cargo, of the value of £38,000, £1,000 for contingent losses, £1,500 salvage reward; & £200 for the master's particular expenses. Where the property is very large, a smaller proportion may afford adequate remuneration.

(2) In cases of large value, & where the service has been rendered with risk to the property of the owners, the ct., both in maritime & military salvage, allots a portion to the owners.

(3) The crew of another vessel on board the wrecked vessel, rather as passengers than as part of the crew, are entitled to some reward for salvage services.

(h) Services under Agreement for Remuneration Independently of Success.

7390. Reward on reduced scale.]—(1) A steam trawler made an agreement with a disabled barque to tow her for a given sum to a named port. During the towage the weather became rapidly bad, & the foremast of the barque falling overboard, the wreckage increased the difficulty. Thereupon the master of the steam trawler declined to be bound by the agreed sum; but it was arranged that he should endeavour to tow, & do the best he could, at a remuneration to be settled on shore. The steam trawler proved of insufficient power to tow effectually, &, on the rope breaking the barque was nearly ashore. The trawler, however, made a successful effort to get hold of her again & towed her out of immediate danger; but, being short of coal, subsequently left the barque in a more dangerous position than when she picked her up, though with a second set of salvors in attendance who ultimately towed the barque into port. In an action of salvage against the owners of the barque:—Held: the steam trawler was not entitled to salvage, she having conferred no actual benefit on the salved property; but she was entitled to some payment for work done under the agreement to endeavour to tow.

(2) The second set of salvors consisted of two steam trawlers, on board of one of which the crew of the barque went, & there remained throughout the towage by the two trawlers, who, between them, made up a salvage crew to pump & steer the barque whilst towing her to a port of safety. The second set of salvors, by their counsel, claimed salvage remuneration on the high scale usual where the vessel is a derelict:—Held: as the crew of the barque were on board her at the time the salvage services commenced, & remained by her throughout the salvage operations, the barque could not, for the purpose of fixing the amount of the salvage reward, be treated as abandoned.

On that agreement [to tow to a definite place] I think I am justified in acting . . . the remuneration cannot be considered on what I may call the strict salvage scale, because one of the main reasons why salvage remuneration is so high is that it involves this, that unless some of the property is saved, no remuneration is obtainable at all (JEUNE, J.).—THE LEPANTO, [1892] P. 122; 66 L. T. 623; 7 Asp. M. L. C. 192.

to pay less for such services than if they had been rendered by another vessel of less power, & taking a longer time to perform them, &, in all probability, not performing them so successfully.

These are some of the principles on which I consider myself entitled to hold that steamers are to be paid in proportion to the value of the services actually rendered. It is not the mere time occupied, it is not the mere labour, but the real value of the services rendered (DR. LUSHINGTON). —THE GENERAL PALMER (1844), 5 Notes of Cases, 159, n.

7426. —— ——.]—The two main ingredients in all salvage services are (a) the danger to which the property is exposed; (b) the danger encountered by the salvors in the rescue of that property, upon these two particulars depends the measure of the compensation to be awarded (DR. 7428. —— ——.]—(1) The Ct. of Appeal is unwilling to interfere with the judicial discretion in cases of salvage, where the quantum awarded is alone the subject of appeal. Though there is no precedent for the reduction of an amount awarded, yet in principle there can be no difference between increasing & reducing such amounts, both being equally an interference with judicial discretion, & the amount must be reduced on appeal when the sum awarded is exorbitant or manifestly excessive. Therefore, where the judge of the Admlty. Ct., acting upon his own unassisted judgment, greatly overrated the value of the services rendered by the salvors:—Held: the amount of his award must be reduced.

(2) In estimating the value of salvage services, circumstances, among others, to be considered by the ct. are, the degree of danger to which the vessel was exposed, & from which she was rescued by the salvors, the mode in which the services of the salvors were applied, & the risk incurred by the salvors in rendering those services.

The submarine was preparing to sink the vessel, but submerged, presumably on sighting two of His Majesty's armed trawlers, & the crew of the vessel were left in their boats. They refused to return, & the two armed trawlers stood by the vessel & eventually towed her to Falmouth. For these services the officers & crews of the trawlers claimed salvage remuneration from the owners of the Swedish vessel & her cargo, but the claim against the cargo was withdrawn. It was argued for deft. shipowners that pltfs. were bound to salve a cargo of munitions for an allied Govt. as part of their public duty; that the saving of the ship was merely incidental to the saving of the cargo; that it was salvage from a war risk, namely, the risk of attack by enemy submarines, & not salvage from a marine risk; & that no salvage remuneration was recoverable:—Held: assuming pltfs. were under a duty to salve the cargo, they were under no duty to the Swedish shipowners to salve their vessel; the saving was not only from submarine attack but from maritime perils also; &, there being a salvage service, the whole risk to the salved vessel, war as well as marine risk, should be taken into account in estimating the value of the services.—THE CARRIE, reward always bears a proportion to the skill & knowledge required & shown, the degree of skill & knowledge expected being according to the station in life of the salvors. After some ineffectual attempts to find her, the steamer went away, but the smacks continued the search & again fell in with the derelict, & while a man from one of them was upon her, & another in a boat alongside, two powerful govt. steamers came up & took possession:—Held: they were entitled to do so, but all the first salvors had nevertheless a right to salvage remuneration. The value of ship & cargo being £2,400, the ct. awarded the first salvors £140, besides £210 expenses, incurred by them in obtaining towing hawsers & other requisites for the service.

(2) In cases of derelict, the High Ct. of Admlty., abandoning the old rule as to a moiety, gives only such a proportion of the value as, under all the circumstances of the case, the ct. deems right & just.

(3) In salvage causes the ct., when it has the assistance of Trinity Masters, will not be guided by the opinions of witnesses skilled in nautical matters.

(4) In performing salvage services, bad faith, an intention not to do the whole duty, or to protract, from improper motives, the duration of the service, are acts of wilful misconduct which forfeit all right to salvage.

(5) Salvors must possess skill & knowledge sufficient to enable them duly to perform the duties which they undertake.

(6) Error not wilful in performing a salvage service operates only in diminution of the amount of remuneration.

(7) A second set of salvors having discovered a derelict vessel, bottom upwards, at sea, near the Eddystone Lighthouse, succeeded, after great exertions during two days & a half, in towing her into Falmouth. They then, in spite of repeated remonstrances, carried on for a month a series of unskilful attempts to right the vessel, in consequence of which attempts she was much strained & injured. Value of ship & cargo £2,400. The ct. awarded £600.—THE MAGDALEN (1861), 31 L. J. P. M. & A. 22; 5 L. T. 807; 1 Mar. L. C. 189.

At the hearing of the action it was stated by defts. that the amount of the damage was about £400:—Held: such want of skill in manœuvring the salving vessel had been proved as went to diminish the award of salvage, & the ct. deducted £400 damages from the sum of £800, intended to have been given to the salvors, & made an award of £400 with costs.—THE DWINA, [1892] P. 58; 61 L. The master & crew of the Y., a vessel in distress, got on board the K., a steamer standing by her. The mate & two of the crew of the K. afterwards went on board the Y. but refused to take her master back with them. The mate subsequently also refused the services of a steam tug, & finally, having from want of local knowledge anchored the Y. in an insecure place, she began to drift, was forsaken by the salvors, & sank. She was subsequently raised by her owners at considerable expense. In an action for salvage the owners of the Y. denied that a reward was due, & counterclaimed for damages:—Held: (1) the mate was guilty of misconduct in refusing to take the master of the Y. on board of her, & to engage the services of the tug; (2) if the Y. had been ultimately saved such misconduct would have worked a partial forfeiture of the reward only; (3) as the loss arising from the misconduct of the salvors was probably equal to that from which the Y. was first rescued, no salvage reward was due.—THE YAN-YEAN (1883), 8 P. However much the licenced pilot may misconduct himself, if the master of the tug, through gross negligence, omits to do what was in his power to keep the ship in a proper direction that she may reach a place of safety, & thereby the ship is lost, or is led into peril as great as that from which she has been rescued, all claim to salvage is forfeited. . . . The very notion of salving a ship supposes that the salvor, instead of merely executing orders, shall perform some extraordinary service, & exert himself to the utmost for the safety of life & property (LORD CAMPBELL).

In general, the consequences as regards those participating in or privy to the thefts is the total forfeiture of salvage, & as regards those guilty of negligence, the forfeiture or diminution of the award.

Property to the value of over £1,000 was stolen by certain members of the crew of one of a number of ships which salved a torpedoed vessel after her crew had left her:—Held: (1) as the thefts were on such a large scale that they must have been known to the rest of the crew as well as to the guilty parties, all the crew had forfeited their right to salvage; (2) as the officers had not exercised due diligence to prevent or detect the thefts they also would forfeit their rights; (3) an exception would be made in the case of the first lieutenant & one other officer who rendered extremely valuable services & would accordingly be awarded salvage but diminished amounts.—THE CLAN SUTHERLAND, [1918] P. 332; 88 L. The B.'s boat was employed in passing the hawsers & making the vessels fast. No member of the crew of the L. performed any special service. On Dec. 1, 1905 the solrs. acting for the owners of the L., without any direct authority from the crew who numbered thirty-six, issued a writ on behalf of the owners, master, & crew of the L., claiming salvage for services rendered to the B., her cargo & freight, & on Dec. 12, 1905 delivered a statement of claim on behalf of the owners, master, & crew of the L, to which on Dec. 27 the owners of the B. delivered a defence. On Dec. 18 twelve of the crew of the L, four able seamen, & eight firemen, gave notice to defts.' solrs. of a change of solrs., & on Jan. 5, 1906, a further statement of claim was delivered on behalf of the twelve, & on Jan. 10 the owners of the B. delivered a defence to that claim. On the hearing of the salvage suits the owners, master, & twenty-four of the crew were represented by two counsel, & the remaining twelve of the crew were also separately represented by two counsel. Counsel for the owners, master, & twenty-four of the crew, when asking for an apportionment, stated that if the usual practice was followed of opportioning the salvage among the crew according to their rating, the effect would be that the engineer officers would receive more than the navigating officers, who probably had had harder work in consequence of the salvage than the engineer officers had had:—Held: (1) as the navigating officers had not taken any extraordinary part in the salvage service, they were not entitled to an increased share in the award, which would be apportioned amongst the crew according to their rating.

(2) Counsel for the twelve seamen asked for costs. The twelve seaman had recovered salvage, & were entitled to be represented; they had given no retainer to the owner's solrs. to appear for them. The owners of the B., opposed the application on the ground that, as the interests of the twelve seamen were exactly similar to that of the rest of the crew, who were represented by counsel for the owners, there was no necessity for separate representation. The owners of the B., asked that the twelve seamen should be ordered to pay the extra costs to which they had been put by reason of the separate representation:—Held: the twelve seamen were not entitled to costs, but they were not to be condemned in costs.

7648. ——.]—It is said, that the master & his crew left the ship with too much precipitation, & that there was no danger. I cannot give credit to such a representation, in opposition to their own conduct. They thought otherwise at the time, & they must be supposed to be the best judges of their own safety. . . . They [the salvors] went out however . . . for the very purpose of saving vessels in distress, a circumstance to which the ct. always pays attention. The subsequent conduct of the salvors appears also to have been perfectly unimpeachable. They brought the vessel immediately into Harwich harbour, & delivered up possession to the officers of the customs. If there had been any considerable danger attending the act of salvage, I should have given what the ct. is in the habit of giving in cases of derelict, an entire moiety. As I think there was not much of that ingredient, I shall give only two fifths (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE FORTUNA (1802), 4 Ch. Rob. 194; 165 E. R. 582.

D. Interest.

7661. Right to.]—The ship was on her voyage from Ceylon to London with a valuable cargo. It was said . . . the value was a circumstance of no importance; but that is not so: the value is uniformly an ingredient, the remuneration being always larger when the property that receives assistance is larger than when it is small (SIR JOHN NICHOLL).

Salvage is not a payment merely for work & labour: other considerations are to be adverted to, the general interests of navigation & the commerce of the country; to encourage exertion, & to excite to risk & peril in the relief of property in danger. . . . The ct. must guard against exorbitant demands & an undue advantage being taken of distress; but when salvors act honestly & fairly, they are to be liberally rewarded, without a minute inquiry into the quantum of labour (SIR JOHN NICHOLL).

Considering the larger value of the ship & cargo, the roughness of the night, the service performed, & the view taken of it by the comrs. on the spot, the resistance to the award is improper. . . . If the award had been of long standing, I should have decreed interest (SIR JOHN NICHOLL).—THE HECTOR (1833), 3 Hag. Adm. 90; 166 E. R. 339.

7670. Jurisdiction of Court of Admiralty.]—Although salvage suits, in the form of actions in personam, are comparatively rare, the Ct. of Admlty. always had jurisdiction, founded apparently on the fiction of an action in rem having been brought & the property salved having been allowed to be taken by the owners, to entertain such suits when at least there existed a corpus of property salved (JEUNE, J.).—THE ELTON, [1891] P. 265; 60 L. 7671. ——.]—The right to salvage may arise out of an actual contract, but it does not necessarily do so. . . . [I have come to the conclusion that] the action in personam did not arise out of jurisdiction in rem, & that the distinction between actions in personam & actions in rem depended only on whether the person or property of deft. was arrested in the first instance. . . . The law of Admlty. imposes on the owner of property saved an obligation to pay the person who saves it simply because in the view of that system of law it is just he should; & this conception of justice naturally imposes a proportionate obligation on any person whose interest in the property is real, though falling short of that of ownership (JEUNE, P.).—THE PORT VICTOR (CARGO EX), [1901] P. 243; 84 L. 7698. ——.]—Defts.' steamship, from Adelaide to London with a cargo of wool, broke down in the Red Sea, owing to damage to her propeller. She was picked up by pltf.'s steamship, from Java to Amsterdam with a general cargo, & was towed in six days about 830 miles to a safe anchorage in Suez Roads. The weather was fine except towards the end of the towage, when the usual northerly wind & some sea were encountered, & during part of the towage varying currents were met with. The salving vessel lost three days & incurred some expense. The values were large, that of the salving vessel, cargo & freight, £88,000, & that of the salved vessel, cargo & freight, £269,700. In an action of salvage the sum of £10,000 was awarded. Defts. appealed on the ground that the amount was excessive:—Held: the amount awarded could not be supported without doing injustice to those whose property was salved, for, in the ct. below, undue weight had been given to the value of the salved property, & the absence of serious danger, either to the salving or to the salved vessel, had not been sufficiently recognised. The award was, therefore, reduced to £6,000.—THE PORT HUNTER, [1910] P. 343; 80 L. J. P. 1; 103 L. T. 550; 26 T. L. R. 610; 11 Asp. M. L. C. 492, C. A.

The master of the ship sent two of his crew, who had volunteered to go, on board the brig, & by their assistance the brig was navigated safely into a British port. In consequence of the absence of the two men, the ship was exposed to risk, & the remainder of her crew had to undergo extra labour:—Held: not only the two men who went on board the brig, but the master & owners of the ship & the rest of the crew of the ship, were entitled to salvage reward for the services rendered.

The master is also entitled to share, as it was upon his responsibility that the two men were sent on board the Charles (SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE).—THE CHARLES (1872), L. R. 3 A. & E. 236; 26 L. T. 594; 21 W. R. 13; 1 Asp. M. L. C. 596.

7748. —— Personal exertions.]—In apportioning salvage reward among the owners, master, & crew of a sailing vessel which has rendered salvage services, the Ct. of Admlty. will not allot to the owners the same proportion of the reward as in the case of services rendered by a steamship, usually one-half, unless the circumstances show that the vessel itself, as where the services are effected by steam power, was the chief agent in effecting the salvage.

In apportioning the sum of £1,500, where the services were mainly the personal exertions of the master & crew of a sailing vessel, the ct. awarded £500 to the owners, £650 to the crew, & £350 to the master.—THE PALMYRA (1872), 25 L. T. 884; 1 Asp. M. L. C. 182.

Property saved £7,000. Salvage £2,000. Apportionment among owners, officers, passengers, & crew.

The owners had no personal merit, & if they take £850, it is ample. To the £300 proposed for the representatives of the captain, I add £50; & I give £100 to the first, & £50 to the second mate; they each had additional responsibility. Of the £650 that remain I am of opinion that the passengers are entitled to share as able bodied seamen; they were delayed, & experienced some inconvenience. The crew will take in proportion to their wages: they had some extra labour, but only for a few hours: there are also three apprentices, & they will take shares equal with the seamen at the lowest rate (SIR JOHN NICHOLL).—THE HOPE (1838), 3 Hag. The ct. is always desirous to hold out to salvors, whether the case be one of derelict or of simple salvage, the expediency of not standing by their strict rights, but to deliver over, as soon, as may be, for the convenience & advantage of the owners of the ship & cargo, the property of which they are in charge, provided always that these salvors, in the first instance, have adequate security for that reward to which they may be found ultimately entitled. . . . The original salvors, who get possession of a vessel, more especially a derelict, are entitled to exclude others, provided the services be completely performed. Every salvor is entitled, as a matter of right, to come to this ct. if he think fit ; he is not compelled to enter into a negotiation with the owners of the ship & cargo. It may be beneficial to himself & the owners that he should do so ; but, as a matter of right, especially in a case of derelict, the salvors are entitled to resort here to enforce their demands ; in other words, the law entitles them to say, " We will have the judgment of the High Ct. of Admlty., as to the extent of remuneration which we ought to receive, & we will not negotiate " (DR. A vessel having run on shore, & been got off water-logged & disabled, was anchored, & the master then quitted with all his crew, to obtain steam assistance. 7812. ——.]—In 1922 pltfs. fitted out an expedition to salve cargo from the wreck of a Dutch steamship which had sunk in 1916 in the North Sea in over 100 feet of water. Pltfs. worked at the scene of the wreck whenever the weather & tides permitted during the summer of 1922 & from Apr. to July, 1923. During that time they had succeeded in cutting a hole into No. 4 hold, had buoyed the wreck, & had extracted some portions of cargo of little value at a cost of over £40,000.

In July, 1923, defts., British subjects & partners in a rival salvage co., arrived on the scene in a British registered ship, &, by sending down their own divers & interfering with pltfs.' diving operations, tried to secure possession of the wreck & cargo, & either prevent further work on the part of pltfs. or establish themselves with pltfs. in concurrent occupation:—Held: pltfs. were sufficiently in occupation of the wreck to exclude third parties from interfering with the property.—THE TUBANTIA, [1924] P. 78; 93 L. So unless a vessel is derelict the salvors have not the right as against the master to the exclusive possession of it, even though he should have left it temporarily, but they are bound on the master's returning & claiming charge of the vessel to give it up to him (SIR BARNES PEACOCK).—COSSMAN v. WEST, COSSMAN v. BRITISH AMERICA ASSURANCE CO. The tug ran short of coal & had to leave her. A steam trawler & a lifeboat then came up & rendered assistance, & she was brought into safety. Actions for salvage were instituted by the trawler & the lifeboat, & the actions were consolidated. The owners of the salved steamship then tendered a lump sum of £350 to the salvors. The salvors took out a summons asking for an order that defts. should apportion the sum tendered between them. The assistant registrar made an order directing the apportionment. Defts. appealed to the judge:—Held: when defts.' servants were present throughout the salvage services & could give the owners of the salved property information as to what was done by the various salvors, it was the duty of the owners of the salved property, if they made a tender, to apportion the sum tendered among the various salvors, though no such duty existed if the owners of the salved property had no means of ascertaining what services were rendered by the different salvors.—THE BURNOCK (1914), 110 L. SECT. 13.—CONTRIBUTION.

SUB-SECT. 1.—LIABILITY TO CONTRIBUTE.

A. In General.

7862. What interests liable to contribute—Ship cargo & freight—According to value.]—(1) No distinction is drawn between salvage to the ship & salvage to the cargo. The practice of the ct. is to take the whole value " of both ship & cargo & assess proportionably on the two.

(2) Where the cargo consists of different commodities, no distinction is drawn between one sort & another, except in the case of bullion, for the salvage of which being an article easily preserved, a lower remuneration is granted than for more bulky merchandise.

(3) In assessing salvage remuneration, the ct. looks to the value of the property saved, & not to its quality, or liability to be more or less damaged.

PART XV. SECT. 12, SUB-SECT. 4.

t. How shares determined.]—A foreign ship becoming disabled, her crew were taken off by one set of salvors & safely landed at a port. Subsequently another set of salvors fell in with the ship & brought her into an adjoining port. The services in both cases were highly meritorious & rendered while the disabled vessel was about 60 miles from the nearest land:—Held: both sets of salvors were entitled to salvage, & a sale of the ship having been effected for $2,560, the ct. awarded the sum of $660 to be divided among the salvors of the crew & $900 among the salvors of the ship.—THE HEINDALL (1872), Y. A. D. 132.—CAN.

a. ———.]—A crew of 30 salvors engaged in the salving of a vessel, whilst sailing her to the shore to beach her, were joined by another crew of equal number, who boarded the vessel with or without the consent of the salvors in charge & assisted in working her to the shore:—Held: in availing of their assistance the first salvors adopted the interference of the second set, & the latter were entitled to have the award apportioned amongst them, having regard to the value of their respective services. — THE CHIPMAN (1877), 6 Nfld. L. R. 132.—NFLD.

b. —— Derelict first discovered by lighthouse keeper—Salving performed by tug hailed & directed by him.]—An abandoned vessel was discovered by the keeper of a lighthouse who hailed a steam-tug & directed her to the vessel. The steam-tug then brought her into port. The value of vessel & cargo was agreed upon at $2,250:—Held: the steam-tug should receive $450, & the lighthouse keeper $25.—THE AFTON (1873), Y. A. 7868. —— Interests benefited.]—H.M. steamship Leopard rendered a salvage service to an English vessel then in the service of the French govt. & laden with a valuable cargo. The suit was entered against the vessel alone, her value being £4,247. The ct., adverting to the difficulty of apportioning salvage where the cargo was not before it, awarded £600 on the value of the vessel.

It is contrary to all principles of justice if a cargo has received & been benefited by the services so rendered, that the whole burden of the salvage remuneration should fall on the ship itself (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE MARY PLEASANTS (1857), Sw. 224; 166 E. R. 1107.

7871. —— ——.]—A ship was chartered to proceed to a foreign port, there load a cargo & bring it home, the chartered freight being payable on delivery of the cargo. While the ship was proceeding in ballast to her port of loading she grounded, & a general average sacrifice was made. She subsequently continued her voyage, loaded her cargo, delivered it & received the freight:—Held: the chartered freight was liable to contribute to the general average sacrifice.

What has to be decided in each case is, there being something saved at the expense of another person, in the case of general average at the expense of one of the persons themselves interested—in the case of salvage of an outsider, what are the elements that have been saved, &, therefore, at whose expense ought the reward for saving to be paid? That involves in the case of salvage just as it does in the case of general average a consideration of what interests are actually at risk & are saved by the sacrifice—viz. in the one case the average sacrifice, in the other the labour & the expenses of the persons salving.—CARISBROOK S.S. CO. v. LONDON & PROVINCIAL MARINE & GENERAL INSURANCE CO., [1902] 2 K. B. 681; 71 L. J. K. B. 978; 87 L. T. 418; 50 W. R. 691; 18 T. L. R. 783; 46 Sol. Jo. 699; 9 Asp. M. L. C. 332; 7 Com. Cas. 235, C. A.

7872. —— —— Liability of shipowner in respect of salvage of cargo.]—The G. fell in with the R., which was in distress. The following agreement was signed by the two captains: "At my request the captain of the G. will tow my ship the R. to St. Nazaire, that being the nearest port, for repairs. The matter of compensation to be left to arbitrators at home." The G. towed the R. safely to St. Nazaire. The R. discharged her cargo at Dunkirk, & an average bond in the usual form was taken from the consignees of the cargo. The owners of the G. brought an action for salvage of the ship & freight against the R., & were awarded salvage. They also brought an action in France for the salvage of the cargo against the cargo owners, but failed in it. They then brought this action in personam against the owners of the R. to recover salvage in respect of the services to the cargo or, in the alternative, damages from defts., for not taking a proper bond to secure salvage from the cargo owners:—Held: defts. were not primarily liable to pay salvage in respect of the cargo, they had not bound themselves by the above agreement to do so, & it was not their duty to obtain a bond from the cargo owners for the proportion of any salvage which might be due.

No primary liability rests on the ship or its owners to pay for the salvage of the cargo. It is laid down in Abbott on Shipping, title, Salvage; "With respect to the parties liable to pay salvage, & the interest in respect of which it is payable, the rule is that the property actually benefited is alone chargeable with the salvage recovered" (HANNEN, P.).—THE RAISBY (1885), 10 P. 7878. —— Owners—Though vessel under requisition at time services rendered.]—A Greek steamship owned by defts., a Greek co., was requisitioned by the Greek Govt. during the war in 1922 between Greece & Turkey. Under the terms of requisition the possession & control of the vessel passed to the Greek Govt., & the master & crew ceased to be employed by defts. & were conscripted into the Greek forces. At the end of the period of requisition the vessel had to be returned to defts. in the same condition as at the beginning of the period. While under requisition the vessel stranded, & was saved from possible total loss by the services of pltfs.' salvage ship. After the vessel had been returned to her owners she was arrested by pltfs. in an action in rem.

Defts. contended that having regard to the terms of requisition the Greek Govt. were to be regarded as temporary owners of the vessel; that the services, therefore, did not give rise to a maritime lien, & that the claim for salvage was not enforceable against defts., who derived no benefit from the services:—Held: the terms of requisition did not dispossess defts. of their property in the vessel; the services were of benefit to defts., as thereby they had their vessel instead of merely a claim against the Greek Govt.; as the services were not those of the crew of the Greek vessel, it was immaterial that the crew were the servants of the Greek Govt., & defts. were liable to pltfs. for salvage.—THE MEANDROS, [1925] P. 61; 94

7880. When shipowner alone liable—Freight exceeding value of salved cargo.]—Where a ship was chartered upon a voyage out & home, at £2 10*s.* per ton, register measurement, per month, £2,500 to be paid on clearing outwards, the like sum at the end of twelve months, & the remainder three months after being reported at the custom house on her return; & the ship delivered her outward cargo, & sailed with her homeward cargo, & was captured & recaptured on the homeward voyage, & the ship & cargo were sold by consent of all parties, the owner & charterers having respectively made claim in the Admlty. Ct. to ship & goods, where restitution was decreed to them upon payment of salvage:—Held: the charterers, having paid the two sums of £2,500, were not liable to contribute to the shipowner for salvage in respect of their goods, where the proceeds of the goods fell short of the sum due for the residue of the freight, but the shipowner in respect of the freight was liable to the whole salvage: & the charterers having paid such contribution out of the proceeds of the goods, under a security given by them for payment of the salvage, with the assent of the shipowner as far as his liability was concerned.

The principle upon which freight is to contribute in the case of general average is, that it was one of the things in hazard at the time when that sacrifice which produced the general average was made (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—COX v. MAY (1815), 4 M. & S. 152; 105 E. R. 791.

7881. —— Salvage services necessitated by default of shipowner.]—The owner of a ship sunk by a collision in the Thames admitted it to be his fault, & paid into ct. £8 a ton in a suit to limit his liability. The Thames Conservators having powers under 40 & 41 Vict. c. 16, & Thames Conservancy Acts, raised the ship & delivered the ship & cargo to the owner, he undertaking to pay the expenses of raising. Part of the cargo was some wool, which was damaged by being sunk:—Held: the shipowner was bound to deliver the wool to the owner of the wool without claiming from him, by way of contribution to salvage, any part of the expenses of raising the ship & cargo.—PREHN v. BAILEY, THE ETTRICK (1881), 6 P. 7882. —— —— Recovery back of contribution.]—In a cause in rem instituted on behalf of the assignees of a bill of lading petition alleged that whilst the vessel was on a voyage to a British port with the cargo mentioned in the bill of lading on board, the master & sole owner of the vessel wilfully cut down & destroyed parts of the vessel, & wilfully abandoned the vessel on the high seas, & the vessel & cargo were afterwards taken possession of as derelict by certain salvors, & towed by them into a British port, & the cargo never was delivered by deft. to pltfs. in accordance with the terms of the bill of lading, although such non-delivery was not occasioned by any of the perils in the bill of lading excepted, & pltfs. were compelled to pay money to the salvors before they could get possession of the cargo & the delivery of the cargo to pltfs. was delayed. It appeared from the proceedings in the cause that the vessel was a foreign vessel & the master was a foreign subject:—Held: the facts disclosed a breach of duty or breach of contract within Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (c. 10), s. 6, in respect of which pltfs. were entitled to institute a cause in rem, & it was competent to pltfs. to institute such cause, although no criminal proceedings had been taken against deft.—THE PRINCESS ROYAL (1870), L. R. 3 A. & E. 41; 39 L. J. Adm. 43; 22 L. T. 39; 3 Mar. L. C. 328.

7883. —— Salvage services necessary for delivery of cargo.]—Pltfs., under a charterparty, shipped a large quantity of rye on board one of defts.' ships to be carried from the port of Taganrog to the port of Altona. Owing to the negligent navigation of defts.' servants, the ship was cast ashore, & a large quantity of the rye was lost, but a considerable quantity was saved by the Salvage Assocn., who were employed by the underwriters of the cargo with the assent of defts. The average statement was prepared, & the sum assessed was agreed to by pltfs., & the Salvage Assocn. were paid by the underwriters the expenses claimed by them. Pltfs. brought an action on behalf of the underwriters to recover the amount of the salvage expenses so paid by the underwriters. Pltfs. recovered a verdict for an amount to be settled out of court. The question of law involved in the case was reserved for further consideration. Defts. contended that they were not liable, because pltfs. themselves had not paid the expenses, & the payment under the circumstances was voluntary:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to recover the amount of the salvage expenses, as, without their being incurred, the remainder of the cargo could not have been sent to its destination, which was for the benefit of defts., & the payment under the circumstances was not voluntary.—SCARAMANGA v. MARTIN MARQUAND & CO. (1885), 53 L. T. 810; 5 Asp. M. L. C. 506, C. A.

7884. Proceeds of sale of ship not sufficient to meet salvage claims—Whether consignees of cargo must bring in balance of freight.]—Foreign ship having been sold by decree of the ct. in a cause of salvage, the proceeds were insufficient to meet all the claims. The ct. refused, under the circumstances, to enforce a monition against the consignees of the cargo to bring in the balance of freight at the suit of the foreign master, though by the foreign law the master had a lien thereon. Importation of foreign law is in the discretion of the ct. It should never be imported to work injustice.—THE JOHANNES CHRISTOPH (1854). 2 Ecc. & Ad. 93; 6 L. T. 661; 1 Jur. N. S. 192; 164 E. 7885. General rule—Value assessed at place where & time when services concluded.]—Rule for estimating value where the salvage concluded at one port & the cargo was transhipped & brought to another & there sold; the salvors are only entitled to salvage on the value at the port where their services concluded.

I imagine the strict method to arrive at the value of the cargo at Lisbon would be, not on any assertion of its being unsaleable there, but by putting it at 7 & 8 per cent. less than the proceeds of its sale in London, deducting freight & other charges for the voyage from Lisbon to London, but allowing a pro rata freight as far as Lisbon (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE GEORGE DEAN (1857), Sw. 290; 30 L. T. O. S. 220; 6 W. R. 263; 166 E. R. 1143.

(2) The value of freight salved is to be reckoned pro rata itineris peracti, & by the other equities of the case.

(3) A ship bound from Honduras to England was disabled on the voyage & towed into Bermuda, where expenses nearly equal to the whole freight were incurred to refit; the voyage home was afterwards completed & the cargo delivered; the ct. allowed salvage upon one-half of the total gross freight.—THE NORMA (1860), Lush. 124; 3 L. 7888. —— ——.]—In an action of salvage pltfs. obtained an award of £1,500 upon an appraised value of defts.' ship of £1,250 & of her cargo of £5,004: total £6,254. The ship was subsequently sold by the marshal for £713; the cargo, which was of a nature not readily saleable in this country for £1,649; & the total £2,362 was reduced by fees & disbursements to £1,625. An award of £130 obtained by the pilot & £100 by boatmen in separate actions in respect of the same salvage operations brought the total salvage claims up to £1,730 which more than absorbed the whole proceeds. On motion by defts. to vary the decree by reducing the award of £1,500:—Held: the application must be refused as defts. had allowed the ct. to proceed to award salvage upon the basis of the appraisement without taking any exception at the time & beyond the difference between the appraised value & the sum realised by the sale, there was nothing to indicate that the appraisement did not fairly represent the value at the time & place when the property was brought into safety.—THE GEORG, [1894] P. 330; 71 L. T. 22; 7 Asp. M. L. C. 476.

7889. —— ——.]—A steam trawler, having fallen in with a disabled steam vessel in the North Sea, towed her to a position off Aberdeen; but as, in the heavy weather prevailing, the master of the trawler was unwilling to incur the risk, without a pilot, of taking a large disabled vessel into the harbour, signals were made for a pilot & a tug, in response to which a tug came out & offered to pilot & tow the disabled vessel in. The master of the disabled vessel declined to accept her services, & after some delay, the trawler was told to go ahead. The hawser parted, & the disabled vessel drove ashore, involving an expense of £1,150 to float her, & £5,600 for repairs. In an action of salvage brought by the owners, master, & crew of the trawler, it was contended by the owners of the disabled vessel that the award, if any, must be based, not on £8,500, the value of the disabled vessel before she stranded, but on the amount she proved to be worth to them, namely, £1,750:—Held: the trawler had done all that could reasonably be expected of her, & was entitled to an award of £750, based on a valuation of £8,500, that being the value of the disabled vessel at the time that she was brought within reach of the tug.—THE GERMANIA, [1904] P. 131; 73 L. The certificate was signed & sealed by the pilotage authority, & was lying in the office to be called for by the master, but he had not applied for it, & was ignorant that it was ready & would be given him on application:—Held: the certificate was not "granted to the master," nor "possessed" by him, within Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), ss. 340, 353, so as to enable him to pilot his vessel in the specified waters.—THE KILLARNEY (1861), Lush. 202; 30 L. 7922. —— —— Belonging to the same owner.]—(1) A certificate issued, & annually renewed, by a pilotage authority, under Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), ss. 340, 341 (now embodied in 1894 Act, s. 599), recited that (name) was master of the ship (named) "whereof (name of firm) are the owners," & stated that it was granted "to enable him to pilot said ship or any other ship or ships belonging to the same owners." The named firm never owned the named ship, or the ship to which the master was subsequently transferred, though the firm managed both ships as belonging to the same line of ocean steamers. Individual members of the named firm held shares, along with other parties, in the named ship, & one of those members was registered as managing owner of the named ship, & of the ship to which the master was transferred, of which latter ship that member was registered as holder of all the shares, though in fact he was only trustee for beneficial owners:—Held: the certificate was invalid by reason of a misstatement as to the ownership, for it only enabled the holder to pilot the named ship, or any other ship belonging to the same owners, that is, the named firm; but the named firm were not owners of the named ship at the date of the original issue of the certificate, or of either vessel at the date of its last renewal, or at the date of a collision between the ship to which the master was transferred & the pltfs.' vessel.

(2) Semble: to satisfy the words "the ship of which he is master or mate, or any one or more ships belonging to the same owner as that ship" in 1894 Act, s. 599, same owners must, at the material times, have held the whole of the shares in the vessel in respect of which the certificate was originally granted as well as hold the whole of the shares in the vessel to which the master is transferred.—THE BRISTOL CITY, [1902] P. 10; 71 L. Sect. 3.—Powers and duties of pilotage authorities: Sub-sect. 4, B., C. & D. Sect. 4: Sub-sects. 1 & 2, A. (a).]

A vessel owned by the Govt. & entered in the Navy List as employed on harbour service was exclusively employed under the Admlty. by the Devonport Dockyard authorities in carrying coals to ships of the Royal Navy. Her master held a Board of Trade certificate, & neither he nor the crew, who were engaged under articles of agreement, were in the navy. The master employed pilots, & proceedings were taken against him in a ct. of summary jurisdiction under 1894 Act, s. 591, for the recovery of pilotage dues according to a scale imposed by bye-laws made in pursuance of 1894 Act, & a local Act, in which the Crown was not mentioned, under which the pilots were licenced:—Held: the vessel was a King's ship, & the master was therefore not liable either under 1894 Act or the local Act to pay pilotage dues on the scale imposed by the bye-laws.—SYMONS v. BAKER, [1905] 2 K. B. 723; 74 L. J. K. B. 965; 93 L. T. 548; 54 W. R. 159; 21 T. L. R. 734; 49 Sol. Jo. 714; 10 Asp. M. L. C. 129, D. C.

7927. —— Fishing vessels—Effect of Admiralty order—For protection of realm.]—During a state of war between Great Britain & Germany the Admlty. directed that a minefield should be laid in the Humber, & that any vessels wishing to pro ceed up that river should take on board a pilot provided by pltfs. for whose services pilotage fees were charged. Deft. complied with this order, but subsequently refused to pay the pilotage fees: —Held: deft. was liable to pay such fees since the order of the Admlty. was intra vires, & since he had accepted the pilots' services to enable his vessels to reach their destination.—HUMBER CONSERVANCY BOARD v. GRANT (1916), 85 L. J. K. B. 1699; 115 L. T. 213; 32 T. L. R. 510; 13 Asp. M. L. C. 421.

7928. When vessels liable—Construction of terms —"Berthing" & "waiting for tide."]—Under Part IV. of the schedule to the Mersey Docks & Harbour Board's Pilotage Bye-laws, 1921, pilotage rates are levied in the lower Mersey for (a) "berthing" a vessel at any stage, & (b) "for each time a vessel is transported" in the river. But these rates are subject to the proviso that "berthing a vessel for which a charge is made under Part IV. (a) "& navigating or moving an outward bound vessel to an anchorage to wait for tide" shall not be deemed "a transporting" for the purpose of these charges:—Held: an outward bound vessel which had to leave the Alfred Dock on the flood tide &, owing to the presence of other vessels at the stage, was compelled to come to an anchorage to wait for a berth at the Prince's landing stage, was not within the proviso. The whole transportation from dock to stage could not be regarded as "berthing," & "waiting for tide" did not include moving to an anchorage to wait, because the time of high water had forced the vessel to leave the dock earlier than she would otherwise have done for the mere purpose of getting to the stage. The shipowners, therefore, were liable to the Board for the amount charged for "transporting from the dock to the anchorage."—THE CYCLOPS, [1923] P. 80; 92 L. J. P. 49; 128 L. T. 702; 39 T. L. R. 185; 16 Asp. M. L. C. 155.

7929. —— Liability under Pilotage Act, 1913 (c. 31), s. 11 (1)—Necessity for offer of services by pilot.]—(1) On the construction of above sub-sect. navigation without a pilot in a compulsory pilotage area is not absolutely forbidden, but the ship is under a continuing obligation to fly the pilot flag & to take a pilot on board if he offers. If no pilot offers there is no liability upon the owner to pay pilotage dues.

(2) The word "services" in above Act, s. 17 (1) means "services rendered," & a pilotage authority cannot make a bye-law imposing a liability on shipowners to pay pilotage dues other than for such services.—W. Where, therefore, there was neglect on the part of the master & crew to keep a good look out, & such neglect conduced to a collision, the owners were held liable for the damage. The defence in substance was that those in charge of pltfs.' steamship improperly allowed a tug in attendance to exhibit a green light on the starboard side of their vessel, thereby leading those in charge of defts.' vessel to believe that pltfs.' vessel was under way; secondly, that if there was any negligence, it was solely that of the pilot in charge by compulsion of law:—Held: (1) defts. were liable, as the plea of compulsory pilotage failed, for though the pilot was to blame for faulty navigation, the blame did not rest solely with him, as the master of defts.' vessel, who was, at the material time, on the bridge, acting as part of the look out, had appreciated, in sufficient time, that pltfs.' vessel was at anchor, but had not pressed upon the attention of the pilot that he was navigating the vessel under an erroneous impression as to the meaning of the green light, which properly indicated that the tug was not attached to pltfs.' vessel, but was, in fact, stemming the tide whilst waiting for orders; (2) the collision might have been avoided, if defts.' master had drawn the attention of the pilot to the omission to direct the giving of the appropriate sound signals on each alteration of the helm, as the vessel at anchor would probably then have given some indication by way of warning of the danger defts.' vessel was incurring.—THE ELYSIA, [1912] P. 152; 81 L. 7984. Employment of unlicenced pilot after offer by licenced pilot—Master piloting his own vessel.]—By 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 58, every master who shall act as a pilot on his own vessel, after a duly licenced pilot shall have offered himself, is subject to forfeit double the amount of pilotage. By 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 70, it is enacted, that every person assuming or continuing to act as pilot without being duly licenced, after a duly licenced pilot shall have offered himself, is subject to a penalty of £50. A., the master of a vessel going up the Humber, refused to take on board a duly licenced pilot, & navigated his own ship to her port of destination, on which the pilot sued him under 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 58, & the clerk of the corpn. of the Hull Trinity House sued him under 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 70:—Held: 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 70, did not include the cases of masters, notwithstanding the words "every person," & the master was only liable under 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 58.—BEILBY v. SHEPHERD (1848), 3 Exch. 40; 18 L. She went from Dieppe to Hull in ballast, & at Hull she took in a cargo to be discharged at Bristol, & went from Hull with such cargo to Bristol, where she discharged her cargo, still sailing under the same articles. When on the voyage from Hull to Bristol, the ship was proceeding up the Bristol Channel, & was within the limits of the port of Bristol, within which, by a local Act, s. 9, "the pilotage by a Bristol pilot is compulsory for all vessels except coasting vessels & Irish traders." The master refused to take a compulsory pilot on board, on the ground that the ship during the voyage from Hull to Bristol was a "coasting vessel" within the meaning of the exemption by reason of her having taken in cargo at Hull destined to be discharged at Bristol, both ports being within the United Kingdom:—Held: the ship was not a "coasting vessel" at the time in question, & the fact that she took in cargo at Hull, a port in the United Kindgom, which she was going to discharge at Bristol, another port in the United Kingdom, did not make her a "coasting vessel" on the voyage from Hull to Bristol, & the master was properly convicted under 1894 Act, s. 603 (2), for having within a district where pilotage was compulsory refused to take a pilot on board.—PHILLIPS v. BORN (1905), 93 L. See Pilotage Act, 1913 (c. 31), s. 11 (1).

7991. Nature of compulsory pilotage.]—(1) Compulsory pilotage is not a charge upon vessels, but is a regulation instituted for their benefit.

(2) A vessel having on board a person who did not pay for his passage, who messed with the captain, & who assisted in the work of the ship:—Held: to be exempt from compulsory pilotage under Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 379.—THE HANNA (1866), L. 7993. —— Bye-laws by harbour authority.]—Pilotage is compulsory in the harbour of Llanelly by virtue of 6 & 7 Vict. c. lxxxviii., & 21 & 22 Vict. c. lxxii., & the bye-laws made thereunder.

It is competent for a harbour authority, which has power to make bye-laws regulating the navigation of their harbour and to appoint pilots, to make pilotage compulsory by means of such bye-laws, & to impose penalties for disobedience to them.—THE RUBY (1890), 15 P. 7996. —— Order of Expeditionary Force Commander—Protection of lines of communication.]—A steamship in charge of a pilot when proceeding up the Shatt-ul-Arab river came into collision with another steamship at anchor. The pilot was in charge in consequence of an order made by the officer commanding the British troops in Mesopotamia. The troops controlled both banks of the river to above the place at which the collision happened. In an action for damage brought by the owners of the steamship at anchor against the owners of the steamship under way, the latter admitted that the collision was caused by the negligence of the pilot, who was in fact in charge & was navigating their vessel, but alleged that he was compulsorily in charge, & that they were not liable for the damage:—Held: the officer in command of the troops had authority to issue orders to ensure the safe navigation of the river, which served as one of the chief lines of communication for the army; & as defts. had proved that the pilot was in charge in consequence of that order, & pltfs. had not shown that though the pilot was compulsorily on board his duty was merely to give advice as to the navigation, the plea of compulsory pilotage succeeded, & defts. were not liable for the damage done.

I hold that the pilot was on board the Andoni by compulsion of the Army Commander, which was, in my view, compulsion of law (HILL, J.).—THE ANDONI, [1918] P. 14; 87 L. J. P. 28; 119 L. T. 154; 14 Asp. M. L. C. 326.

The pilot having been found alone to blame:—Held: though defts.' vessel was an exempt ship under 1894 Act, & therefore defts. could not have availed themselves of the defence of compulsory pilotage, the pilot actually "conducting" the vessel was, under the new & temporary regulations, compulsorily in charge in the sense that defts. were not liable for his wrongful acts.—THE NORD, [1916] P. 53; 85 L. A foreign vessel inward bound for Liverpool is required by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 92, ss. 129, 130, to make a signal for a licenced pilot on coming to the usual pilot station, & to employ the first pilot offering his services. a pier in the Humber from the pilot who had brought her in from sea. One sum was paid for the services of the two pilots:—Held: the schooner was in charge of a pilot whose employment was compulsory by law.

There has been an attempt made to show that by the change of pilots the compulsory pilotage ceased. But it is a common custom for pilots to divide their duties, one brings a ship up the port, another takes her into dock, & the two performances of their duty by these pilots must be considered as a single pilotage service, so that here there was one act of pilotage, for which one set of pilotage dues was paid. It has also been argued that the compulsory pilotage had ceased because the Rigborgs Minde had anchored before she was taken into dock. . . . A temporary anchorage has not this effect. The Clyde Pilot Board, which under the Act had the sole right of licencing pilots for the navigation of the river & Firth of Clyde, licenced river pilots vessels between Greenock & places in the river area, & by its bye-laws made under the Act provided that such pilots should be remunerated for the whole distance between Greenock & Glasgow & that the pilot when on board should have sole charge of the vessel.

They [the bye-laws] do not purport to extend the area of compulsory pilotage . . . if they did they would be ultra vires. . . . There is nothing in those bye-laws to prevent the master of an incoming ship who picks up a pilot at G. from keeping control of his ship till he reaches the compulsory area, nor to prevent the master of an outerbound vessel who has taken a pilot on board . . . from putting the pilot aside & taking command of his own ship as she passes out of the compulsory area (LORD ATKINSON).—BEECHGROVE S.S. NOTE.—In considering these cases regard should be had to the provisions of Pilotage Orders issued under the authority of Pilotage Act, 1913 (c. 31), s. 10 (1).

8012. What is "compulsory pilotage district" —Effect of imposition of pilotage charge whether pilot taken or not.]—If it had been enacted simply that a pilot should be taken, without providing that in case a pilot was not taken, the pilotage should be paid, the master would clearly have been liable to be indicted for a misdemeanour in refusing to take him (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE MARIA (1839), 1 Wm. Rob. 95; 7 L. T. 648; 166 E. R. 508.

8013. —— ——.]—The Liverpool Pilot Act, 1824, s. 35, provides that in case the master of an outward-bound ship shall proceed to sea, & shall refuse to take on board & employ a pilot, he shall pay to the pilot who first offers his services the pilotage fee, as if he had accepted his services:—Held: this sect. made it compulsory on the masters of outward-bound ships to take on board a pilot when proceeding to sea.—RODRIGUES v. MELHUISH & JONES (1854), 10 Exch. 110; 2 C. 8014. —— River Thames.]—Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 354, making pilotage compulsory upon certain vessels, is not to be restricted by the provision of sect. 353, that all existing exemptions from compulsory pilotage should continue in force.

An Irish trader (as described by 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 59) therefore, carrying passengers, is compelled to employ a licenced pilot in the river Thames.—THE TEMORA (1860), Lush. 17; 1 L. T. 418; 167 E. R. 9.

8016. —— River Tyne.]—Assuming 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 58, would otherwise have made it compulsory on a British vessel to employ a licenced pilot in the Tyne, the case was within sect. 89, & therefore it was not compulsory by law on a British ship to employ a licenced pilot in the Tyne, at the time Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), came into operation; & consequently the owner was not protected by sect. 388 from liability for damage occasioned by the fault of a qualified pilot in charge of a ship.—TYNE IMPROVEMENT COMRS. v. GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION CO. 8019. —— ——.]—Defts.' steam vessel, belonging to the port of London, whilst proceeding, in charge of a duly licenced Trinity House pilot, down the river Thames, bound from London to East Africa with cargo & passengers, came into collision, through the fault of the pilot alone, with some tugs & barges of pltfs. in Bugsby's Reach:—

Held: defts. were not liable for the damage sustained by pltfs., as pilotage was compulsory, the port of London, within which the collision occurred, being a port in relation to which particular provision, for the appointment of pilots, had been made by charter & by Act of Parliament, within 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 59.—THE UMSINGA, [1912] P. 120; 81 L. 8020. —— Port of Havre.]—Although the employment of a pilot by a vessel entering the port of Havre is, by French law, compulsory, such pilot does not as of right, as is the case in England, supersede the master & take charge of the ship, but, according to French decisions, the master remains in charge, the pilot being merely his adviser; hence, though the master may allow such pilot to take charge in fact, the owners are not exempted from liability for damage done to another ship by the negligence of the pilot.—THE AUGUSTA (1887), 57 L. 8021. —— River Danube.]—By arts. 85, 89, & 92 of the International Rules for the Navigation of the Danube, pilotage is compulsory in the case of a vessel navigating the Danube, but the master of such a vessel is not required to give up the navigation of it to the pilot. Where, therefore, the master of such a vessel has in fact given up the navigation of it to a pilot, the owners remain answerable for damage caused by the improper navigation of the pilot.—THE AGNES OTTO (1887), 12 P. 8025. —— Port of Manchester.] — Defts.' vessel, inward bound from the sea to Manchester, after anchoring in the Mersey to wait for the tide, was proceeding through the Eastham Channel when she came into collision, near No. 4 buoy, with pltfs.' vessel. In an action of damage by collision, the pilot of defts.' vessel was found alone to blame:—Held: pilotage was compulsory, &, therefore, defts. were not liable, for, under the Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Act, 1858, the master of every vessel other than a coaster in ballast, or under the burthen of one hundred tons, entering the port of Liverpool from the sea, is under an obligation to employ a pilot, &, if the vessel is proceeding to the port of Manchester, via the Ship Canal, the duties of the pilot continue until the vessel reaches Eastham.

Semble: every vessel, with the same exemptions, outward bound from the Manchester Ship Canal, is under compulsory pilotage on leaving the canal at Eastham.—THE MERCEDES DE LARRINAGA, [1904] P. 215; 73 L. J. P. 65; 90 L. T. 520; 20 T. L. R. 375; 9 Asp. M. L. C. 571.

8027. —— Effect of imposition of penalty.]—THE RUBY, No. 7993, ante.

8028. —— ——.]—(1) Where a public local Act, in force before the passing of Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), & regulating a port, imposes a penalty on any unlicenced person taking upon himself to conduct or pilot any ship into or out of a port, pilotage is compulsory.

(2) Pilotage rates, fixed by bye-laws made by trustees under a local Act, & under Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), & duly sanctioned by Her Majesty in Council, may be sued for by a pilot who has rendered service as such.—JONES v. BENNETT (1890), 63 L. T. 705; 6 Asp. M. L. C. 596, D. C.

8029. Extent of compulsory pilotage district—London district—Extends to Gravesend.]—All vessels coming up the Channel to London, are required by Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 378, to take a pilot on board at Dungeness, & to put him in charge of the ship.

From Dungeness to London Bridge, is, by s. 370, constituted the Trinity House Pilotage district; but no pilot can be licenced to conduct ships both above & below Gravesend; & the pilotage rates are rates from Dungeness to Gravesend, & not to any intermediate place.

Defts.' vessel coming up the Channel to London, took a pilot on board at Dungeness; before reaching Gravesend, whilst the vessel was still under the control of the pilot, she came into collision with pltfs.' vessel, through the pilot's negligence. Defts.' vessel belonged to the port of London; if the port extends to Yantlett Creek, she was at the time of the collision within her own port; if it only extends to Gravesend, she was not within her own port:—Held: for pilotage purposes the port of London extends only to Gravesend.—GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION CO. v. BRITISH & COLONIAL STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD. 8030. —— —— Includes port of Dover.]—A ship, which was not an excepted ship, was directed by her charterers, under the powers given by the charterparty, to proceed to Dover to receive orders as to her port of discharge. She passed Dungeness & proceeded to Dover, where she stopped for half-an-hour about a quarter of a mile outside the end of the Admlty. pier when a boat came alongside out of the port with orders for her to proceed to Hamburg to which port she immediately proceeded. The London pilotage district extends to Dungeness, & the port of Dover is within that district. Neither the master nor the mate of the vessel held a pilotage certificate for the district:—Held: the ship, by stopping outside the port of Dover for orders, was making use of that port within Pilotage Act, 1913 (c. 31), s. 11, & was therefore bound while navigating in the London pilotage district, for which pilotage was compulsory, for the purpose of making use of a port in that district to be under the pilotage of a licenced pilot of the district.—CANNELL & TRINITY

British steamship at anchor. The ct. found pltf.'s vessel alone to blame, the fault being that of the pilot, & evidence having been given as to the Belgian law on the question of compulsory pilotage:—Held: though the employment of the pilot was compulsory in the sense that his fees must be paid, the pilot was by Belgian law the adviser of the master who remained in charge, &, therefore, pltfs. were liable for the damage sustained by deft.'s vessel.—THE DALLINGTON v. THE SOCOTRA, [1903] P. 77; 72 L. The same language is to be found in other sects. 8047. Procedure of court governed by Statutory Rules—Encroachment on rights of shipmasters by local provisions.]—(1) The Shipping Casualties & Appeals & Rehearing Rules, 1907, made under 1894 Act, govern the procedure in British Wreck Comr.'s cts., & the rights of British shipmasters in such cts. must be ascertained by considering whether the local provisions diminish the safeguards given to British masters by the British Rules. Under r. 3: "When an investigation has been ordered, the Board of Trade may cause a notice, to be called a notice of investigation, to be served upon the owner, master, & officers of the ship. . . . The notice shall contain a statement of the questions which, on the information then in possession of the Board of Trade, they intend to raise on the hearing of the investigation. . . ." Under r. 12: "After the questions for the opinion of the ct. have been stated, the ct. shall proceed to hear the parties to the investigation upon, & determine the questions so stated. . . ."

By 1894 Act, s. 470 (4): "A certificate shall not be cancelled or suspended by a ct., holding a formal investigation into a shipping casualty, unless a copy of the report or a statement of the case on which the investigation or inquiry has been ordered, has been furnished before the commencement of the investigation or inquiry to the holder of the certificate."

Under s. 36 of the Canada Shipping Act, 1908, "A certificate shall not be cancelled or suspended . . . unless the holder of the certificate has had an opportunity of making a defence":—Held: the sect. amply protected the rights of British shipmasters & was not repugnant to the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act & the rules made thereunder.

(2) A British master holding a Board of Trade certificate received a notice of investigation calling upon him to appear before a Wreck Comrs.' ct. at Montreal appointed "to inquire into the causes which led to the casualty (the stranding of his vessel) & into all the facts connected therewith. specifically formulated against the master before or at the inquiry that he was in fault in connection with any of the matters on which he was examined.

The ct. found the master guilty of an error of judgment in taking wrong helm action & in failing to stop & take soundings, & suspended his certificate for three months. The master appealed:—Held: the master, having had no notice of the charges on which he had been found in fault, had not had an opportunity of making his defence, & the decision of the Wreck Comr.'s ct. must be quashed & the certificate restored free from suspension.—THE CHELSTON, [1920] P. 400; 90 L. 8051. —— Summoning of witnesses.]—A local marine board, appointed under Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), to inquire into a charge of alleged misconduct against the master or mate of a vessel, has a discretionary power as to granting summonses for witnesses for the defence.

It is a proper course for such ct. before granting the summonses, to inquire who the witnesses are, & what they are expected to prove; & to refuse the summons in respect of any witness who can only speak to matters clearly irrelevant.

The witnesses summoned for the defence are witnesses of the ct., & their expense is borne not by deft. but by the public.—R. v. COLLINGRIDGE (1864), 34 L. J. Q. B. 9; sub nom. R. v. LONDON LOCAL MARINE BOARD, 12 W. R. 1109.

8052. —— Suspension of master's certificate—Failure to stand by in case of collision—Collision with fishing cable.]—A collision having occurred off the Yorkshire coast between a steamship & a fishing coble, whereby the latter sank & three men on board were drowned, a coroner's inquest was held, to which the Board of Trade sent a clerk, who took notes of the evidence, & returned them to the Board. Acting thereon, the Board of Trade ordered an investigation into the circumstances of the collision by two justices, who accordingly sat as a ct. of inquiry, summoned the master & mate of the steamship, & other witnesses, & heard a charge preferred against the master & mate on behalf of the Board of Trade, under Merchant Shipping Act (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 33, which enacts that "in every case of collision between two 'ships' . . . the person in charge of each ship shall render to the other ship, her master, crew, & passengers, if any, such assistance as may be practicable & necessary to save them from danger, & if he fail so to do his certificate may be cancelled or suspended." The coble was a vessel of 10 tons burden, 24 feet in length, decked forward only. She had two movable masts, & a lug sail for each; was accustomed to go 20 miles out to sea, & to remain out twelve hours at a time. She usually sailed, but was sometimes propelled by oars when occasion required. The ct. of inquiry having heard evidence, found that the master & mate of the steamship did not render assistance to save the crew of the coble, & made an order suspending their certificates. On a motion for a certiorari to bring up this order for the purpose of quashing it:—Held: the justices had jurisdiction, & their proceedings were regular under Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), ss. 241, 242, 432, 433 & Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), ss. 23, 33.—Ex p. FERGUSON (1871), L. 8053. —— —— Stranding—No material damage or loss of life.]—The Merchant Shipping Act, 1876 (c. 80), does not extend the jurisdiction to suspend or cancel the certificate of the master to cases not within Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), ss. 242, 432. There is, therefore, no power to suspend the master's cerrificate where a ship has merely been stranded without material damage to the ship or loss of life.—Ex p. STORY (1877), 3 Q. B. Where a ct. of inquiry ordered a master's certificate to be suspended, & the only ground on which the decision could be supported was that serious damage to a ship had been caused by the wrongful act or default of the master within Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 242 (2), & on appeal it appeared to the Ct. of Appeal that there was no evidence that the damage had been caused by the wrongful act or default of the master, the Ct. of Appeal reversed the decision, & restored to the master his certificate.—THE ARIZONA (1880), 5 P. One of the yachts in breach of a sailing rule, through improper navigation without the actual fault or privity of the owner, ran into & sank the other yacht:—Held: there was a contract between the owners upon which the owner of the damaged yacht could sue the owner of the other, & upon the true construction of the rules the words "all damages" excluded the operation of Merchant Shipping Act (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 54, which limited the liability to £8 per ton.—CLARKE v. DUNRAVEN (EARL), THE SATANITA, [1897] A. The first tug was held to blame & her owners sought to limit their liability under 1894 Act, s. 503 & 1900 Act, s. 1.

The owners of the tug contended that the damage was caused by the tug's failure to tow & not by improper navigation or management, & that the failure to tow amounted only to a breach of contract in respect of which the tug owners could not limit their liability:—Held: the improper casting off of the tow rope was an act of improper navigation within the meaning of s. 503 & the tug owners were entitled to a decree of limitation.—THE VIGILANT, [1921] P. 312; 90 L. The negligent navigation causing the damage was that of pltfs.' servants on the tug & on the barges, all of which were British built. The tug & all the barges belonged to pltfs. The steamship was struck by the tug & one of the barges, but another barge, fast to the colliding barge, by her weight & momentum contributed to the damage. Pltfs. sought to limit their liability, in accordance with 1894 Act, to an amount based on the tonnage of the tug, or alternatively on the tonnage of the tug & the colliding barge. The shipowners contended that pltfs. could not limit their liability on the tonnage of any of the barges on the ground that they were not "ships," or that if "ships" they were not registered:—Held: (1) the barges, which were fitted with rudders & were not propelled by oars, were "ships" within 1894 Act, ss. 503 & 742; (2) by virtue of 1898 Act (c. 14), s. 1 & 1906 Act, s. 85, sched. 8072. "Owners"—Whether unregistered as well as registered owners.]—The word "owners" in Merchant Shipping Act (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 54, which gives limited liability in certain cases to "the owners of any ship" includes unregistered as well as registered owners.

If the loss is occasioned by the actual fault of one of several part owners, his co-owners are not thereby precluded from a right to the limited liability given by Merchant Shipping Act (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63).

On July 24, C. junior, a registered part owner of a vessel, transferred his shares, by bill of sale, to C. senior. This bill of sale was not registered until after Nov. 22 on which day a collision took place, C. junior being on board & in command of the vessel as master. It was not denied that he personally was in fault. On a cause for limited liability being instituted by C. senior, & by all the registered owners of the vessel except C. junior:—Held: they were all entitled to the privilege of limited liability given by Merchant Shipping Act (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63).—THE SPIRIT OF THE OCEAN (1865), Brown. & Lush. 336; 5 New Rep. 450; 34 L. 8074. —— —— Validity of pass from Commissioners of Customs—1894 Act, s. 23.]—The Comrs. purporting to act under above sect., granted a pass to pltfs.' vessel "to make one voyage as a British unregistered vessel from the Port of London to Immingham." While sailing under this pass, the vessel by her bad navigation caused three vessels, which belonged to some of defts., to come into collision whereby all three sustained damage. Pltfs. claimed to limit their liability in respect of this bad navigation of their vessel. Some of defts. alleged that the pass was invalid as no time was mentioned therein in accordance with above sect., so that the vessel could not be recognised as a British ship, & pltfs. could not limit their liability:—Held: the pass was valid, having been granted "for the time . . . therein mentioned" within the terms of above sect.—namely, for the time of the voyage, & pltfs. were entitled to limit their liability.—THE WILLS No. 66 (1914), 83 L. collision. The ct. held that it had jurisdiction to entertain the suit for limitation of liability, & granted, upon terms, an order to stay all actions pending in any other ct. relating to the subject-matter of the suit.

The order was served upon M., pltf. in an action at common law brought against the L. & S. W. Ry. Co., who were the owners of the Normandy to recover damages for the loss of goods, forming part of the cargo of the Normandy which had been received by the co. in London to be carried for M. from London to Jersey. Motion on behalf of M. to dissolve the order so far as it affected M. refused.—THE NORMANDY (1870), L. R. 3 A. & E. 152; 39 L. J. Adm. 48; 23 L. T. 631; 18 W. R. 903; 3 Mar. L. C. 519.

8076. —— —— ——.]—A passenger took a through ticket at a railway station from London to Guernsey. The sea part of the journey was performed in a ship belonging to the railway co., which came into collision with another ship during the passage, causing a considerable delay, & the loss of the passenger's luggage:—Held: the co., as shipowners, were within the protection of Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 504, which limits the liability of shipowners.

Injunction accordingly granted to restrain an action at law by the passenger against the co. on the contract for the loss of his luggage.

Other actions had been brought against the co. for damage to goods, for the loss of the ship which was run into & sunk, & for compensation for loss of life under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93):—Held: the co. was entitled to injunction to stay these actions.—LONDON & SOUTH WESTERN RY. 8077. —— General manager of railway company.]—A person described on the ship's register as managing owner, who owns no share in the ship & acts as the paid manager of the shareholders, is not one of "the owners" within 1894 Act, s. 503, which allows "the owners" of a ship to limit their liability where damage or loss under certain circumstances takes place without their "actual fault or privity."

When a co., incorporated by Act of Parliament, have a general manager who represents the co. & when the co. own a ship, and have a paid manager for her, who owns no share in her, but is described on her register as managing owner, the proper deponent to make the usual affidavit verifying the statement of claim in an action for limitation of the liability of the co. as the owners of the ship, is the general manager & not the managing owner.—THE YARMOUTH, [1909] P. 293; 79 L. d. —— Gross negligence of owners—Ship lost by fire—Injury to passenger.]

Sect. 4.—Losses in respect of which principle applies.]

—A shipowner is entitled to limit his liability in respect of the loss of passenger's personal effects.

I hold that "other things" [in 1894 Act, s. 503] includes the personal effects of the passengers on board the ship (BUCKNILL, J.).—THE STELLA (1899), 81 L. T. 235; 8 Asp. M. L. C. 605.

8085. —— —— ——.]—The words "or other things whatsoever on board the ship," in 1894 Act, s. 503 (1) (b), include passengers' luggage.—THE STELLA, [1900] P. 161; 69 L. J. P. 70; 82 L. T. 390; 16 T. L. R. 306; 9 Asp. M. L. C. 66.

8086. Must be loss to which decree of limitation applicable.]—The Bernina, laden with iron ore under a charterparty, & bound for Cardiff, came into collision with the Bushire, & received so much damage that she was obliged to put into Lisbon. As the Bernina could not be repaired at Lisbon, her owners, in order to earn their freight, transshipped the cargo into three other steamers, only one of which arrived at her destination, the other two being lost through perils not excepted in the charterparty. Both the Bernina & the Bushire were to blame for the collision. The owners of the Bernina brought an action & obtained a decree for limitation of liability in respect of the collision. In an action by the charterer against the owners of the Bernina for the non-delivery of that portion of the cargo which was lost:—Held: the decree of limitation of liability did not apply to the loss, & pltf. was entitled to recover.—THE BERNINA (1886), 12 P. D. 36; 56 L. J. P. 38; 56 L. T. 450; 35 W. R. 214; 3 T. L. R. 175; 6 Asp. M. L. C. 112.

8087. Manner of loss—Loss due to "improper navigation"—Improper navigation by other than master & crew.]—The limitation of the shipowner's liability by Merchant Shipping Act (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63), applies to all cases of improper navigation, whether the vessel improperly navigated be a stranger to the vessel injured, or be towing her at the time, or be otherwise connected with her.

This limitation of liability is "a ground of equitable defence" within Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 24 (2), & not a mere plea to damage. It is proper & necessary, therefore, to claim relief under the sect. in the statement of defence.—WAHLBERG v. YOUNG (1876), 45 L. J. Q. B. 783; 24 W. R. 847; 2 Char. Pr. Cas. 54.

Annotation:—Apld. The Vigilant, [1921] P. 312.

8088. —— —— —— Person for whom owner responsible.]—The words "improper navigation" Merchant Shipping Act (Amendment) Act 1862 (c. 63), s. 54 (4), are not to be restricted to the negligent navigation of a vessel by her master & crew, for the statute includes all damage wrongfully done by a ship to another whilst it is being navigated, where the wrongful action is due to the negligence of a person for whom the owner is responsible. Therefore when a vessel, owing to the negligence of a person on shore in overlooking the machinery, steered so badly that she came into collision with another vessel, & the judge, in an action for limitation of liability, gave a decree in her favour:—Held: such judgment was right & the statute applied to such a case.—THE WARKWORTH (1884), 9 P. D. 145; 53 L. J. P. 65; 51 L. T. 558; 33 W. R. 112; 5 Asp. M. L. C. 326, C. A.

8089. —— —— Improper casting off of tow rope.]—THE VIGILANT, No. 8069, ante.

8090. —— —— Improper use of capstan on stationary vessel.]—By 1894 Act, s. 503 (1), "Where any loss or damage is caused to any other vessel . . . by reason of the improper navigation of the ship," the owners of the ship, if not guilty of any default or privity, shall not be liable to damages beyond an aggregate amount not exceeding £8 for each ton of their ship's tonnage.

Pltfs., the Port of London Authority, owners of the barge Alde, sought to limit their liability to an amount based on the tonnage of the barge in respect of the amount of the damage caused by the Alde forcing another barge, the Tom Tit, on to the propeller of the steamship Ascania. At the trial of the damage action the Alde was held to blame, but it was left in doubt whether the man in charge of her did not derive some assistance in giving her the forward movement which did the damage from some men working a capstan on the P. L. A.'s grain sucker Turbo. Accordingly, in the present action, the owners of the Ascania contended that pltfs. had failed to establish that the damage was solely caused by the improper navigation of the Alde, & that therefore they were not entitled to a decree of limitation of liability at all, or, in the alternative, that they could only limit on the combined tonnage of the Alde & the Turbo:—Held: 1894 Act, s. 503, gave relief in respect of improper navigation of a ship, & not in respect of negligence by individuals; the improper use of a capstan on a stationary vessel did not constitute improper navigation on the part of that vessel; & pltfs. were entitled to a decree of limitation of liability based on the tonnage of the Alde alone.—THE ALDE, [1926] P. 211; 95 L. J. P. 163; 136 L. T. 187; 42 T. L. R. 721; 17 Asp. M. L. C. 157.

8092. Loss must be without fault or privity of owner—Scope of exemption.]—(1) In an action for limitation of liability, where defts. raised an issue which was decided against them, the ct. ordered pltfs. to pay all the costs of the action, except the costs incidental to the raising of such issue, as to which each party was to pay his own costs.

(2) The words "without their actual fault or privity" are used. These seem to show an intention to relieve the shipowner when damage has been caused by the fault of his servants & he himself has not been in any way to blame (BUTT, J.).—THE WARKWORTH (1883), 9 P. D. 20; 53 L. J. P. 4; 49 L. T. 715; 32 W. R. 479; 5 Asp. M. L. C. 194; on appeal (1884), 9 P. D. 145, C. A.

8093. —— Effect on co-owners—Necessity for fault or privity of each.]—In an action against —Where, in the circumstances, the only inference to be drawn is that the owners were grossly negligent, the owners of the ship cannot invoke the limitation provided by "Canada Shipping Act," R. S. C. 1906, c. 113, s. 921.—DOMINION FISH CO. v. ISBESTER (1910), 43 S. C. R. 637; 31 C. L. T. 198. —CAN.

several defts., as shipowners, for damage sustained by the loss of goods laden on board their ship, it was held that by 53 Geo. 3, c. 159, s. 1, they were not liable in that character beyond the value of the ship & freight due or to grow due, although the loss was occasioned by the misconduct of one of defts., who was both master & part owner.

It seems that the true construction of the clause is this, that if you sue a sole owner, & the fault or privity were in him, he will be excluded from the protection of the statute; but if you sue several owners, then the words applicable to that case are "without the fault or privity of such owners," the fair & true construction of which is, that there must be the fault or privity of each (BAYLEY J.).—WILSON v. DICKSON (1818), 2 B. & Ald. 2; 106 E. 8098. —— —— —— Master on board but not in charge.]—In a cause of limitation of liability under Merchant Shipping Act (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 54, arising out of a collision, pltfs. alleged that the collision occurred without their fault or privity. It was proved that the master, who was also part owner of the vessel sued, was on board at the time of the collision, but not on deck, the vessel being then in charge of the second mate & a coasting pilot:—Held: under these circumstances there was no obligation upon the master to be on deck; the fact of his being part owner was no reason for chargng the other owners with blame; & the fact of his being on board at the time of the collision was not in itself sufficient to show that it occurred with his "fault or privity."—THE OBEY (1866), L. 8099. —— Unseaworthiness of ship—Negligent overheating of non-insulated stove.]—Owing to the negligence of the crew in overheating a stove, a fire broke out on board deft.'s ship, & pltfs.' cargo was damaged. Pltfs. alleged that the ship was unseaworthy in that the stove was placed too near to a bulkhead without any means of insulation, & as deft. must be taken to be "privy" to the position of the stove, he could not rely upon 1894 Act, s. 502 (1), by which the owner of a British seagoing ship is not liable to make good any loss or damage happening "without his actual fault or privity" to goods damaged "by reason of fire on board the ship." Secondly, pltfs. contended that a great part of the damage was due to smoke & to water used to extinguish the fire, which was not damage included in the statute:—Held: (1) deft. could claim the statutory exemption from liability, for the stove was perfectly safe if properly used, &, therefore, the vessel was seaworthy & deft. not in fault or "privy" to the negligence of the crew; (2) damage by smoke & by water used in putting out a fire is damage "by reason of fire" within the meaning of the statute.—THE DIAMOND, [1906] P. 282; 75 L. 8100. —— —— Liability for neglect of manager.]—A collision occurred between the Fanny & the Lily Green due to the former breaking adrift from her moorings; & in a collision action the Fanny was held solely to blame. Pltf., the owner of the Fanny, now sought to limit his liability under 1894 Act, s. 503. The judge held that pltf., who was an old man of eighty years of age & had been confined to his house for eight years, was not entitled to limit his liability, on the ground that he was in fault in having appointed an incompetent person as manager. On appeal:—Held: there was no evidence that the manager appointed by pltf. was incompetent, & pltf. was entitled to limit his liability.—THE FANNY (1912), 28 T. L. R. 217; 56 Sol. Jo. 289, C. A.

8101. —— —— Absence of proper ground tackle.]—An unfinished vessel was sent by pltfs., a firm of shipowners & shipbuilders who built the vessel, from Bristol to Cardiff to have her engines put on board. She had no hawse pipes or windlass, no chain cable, & only one anchor & about 48 fathoms of 4½-inch wire rope. She was sent to Cardiff in tow of two tugs, & pltfs. had arranged for her to be brought back to Bristol in tow of two tugs. The second tug did not arrive, & pltfs.' marine superintendent decided to start with only one tug. The weather was then a moderate gale. After the towage started the weather got worse, the tug's tow rope parted, the one anchor was let go but failed to hold, & the vessel drifted across the bows of a sailing ship at anchor & damaged her. Pltfs. sought to limit their liability for the collision under 1894 Act, s. 503, which provides that where without the actual fault or privity of the shipowners damage is caused to another vessel by reason of the improper navigation of the ship, they shall not be liable to damages beyond an aggregate amount not exceeding £8 for each ton of their ship's tonnage:—Held: although pltfs. contemplated that the voyage would be made with two tugs, the vessel ought not to have been sent across without hawse pipes or proper ground tackle, & the absence of proper ground tackle was the real cause of the collision; as pltfs. were shipowners as well as builders, they must be taken to have had knowledge as to what constitutes seaworthiness: they had not therefore discharged the onus upon them of establishing that the collision happened without their actual fault or privity; &, accordingly, they were not entitled to a decree of limitation of liability.—THE BRISTOL CITY, [1921] P. 444; 91 L. J. P. 6; 126 L. T. 80; 37 T. L. R. 901; 15 Asp. M. L. C. 390, C. A.

8102. —— —— Non-latent defect.]—Pltfs. chartered from defts. a steamer to carry sugar from Java to the United Kingdom, a clause in the charterparty providing that defts. should not be answerable for any loss or damage arising from any latent defects in machinery or hull not resulting from want of due diligence by the owners of the ship. Before the voyage defts. sent the ship to repairers for overhaul, & a representative of defts. watched the repairs, but on the voyage water got into the hold through a corroded valve & damaged the sugar. In an action for damages owing to unseaworthiness:—Held: in fact the ship was unseaworthy, the defect was not latent within the meaning of the above clause, &, even if it was latent, it could have been discovered by due diligence, & the clause was no protection, but defts. were entitled to have their liability limited under 1894 Act, s. 503.—LONDON RANGOON TRADING CO., LTD. v. ELLERMAN LINES, LTD. 8103. —— —— Unseaworthiness avoidable with special precaution.]—A ship of the 'turret" type was chartered for a voyage from New York to China under a charterparty which incorporated the Harter Act of the United States. That Act provided that if the owners exercised due diligence to make the vessel in all respects seaworthy & properly manned they should not be held responsible for loss resulting from faults or errors in navigation or in the management of the ship. The charterers shipped a cargo under bills of lading which incorporated the Harter Act & also contained a clause exempting the owners from loss occasioned by "accidents of navigation of whatsoever kind, even when occasioned by the negligence, default, or error in judgment of the . . . master . . . not resulting, however, in any case from want of due diligence by the owners of the ship."

Shortly after leaving New York the master ordered two water tanks to be emptied, with the result that the ship capsized & sank. Nine years previously, after the loss of a sister ship by capsizing, the builders had sent to the owners a series of instructions for loading the ship, including an instruction that when she was loaded with a homogeneous cargo, as on the voyage in question, the water ballast tanks were to be filled. The owners had never communicated these instructions to the master, who was a competent seaman with long experience of turret ships:—Held: (1) the ship was inherently unseaworthy in certain not improbable conditions unless special precautions were taken, which it was the duty of the owners to enjoin as being required by the structure of their ship, & the owners were therefore liable for the loss of the cargo; (2) the owners were not entitled to the limitation of liability prescribed by 1894 Act, s. 503, as they had failed to prove that the loss occurred without their actual fault or privity.—STANDARD OIL CO. 8105. Necessity for separate act of negligence—Collision with two vessels one after the other—First collision substantial cause of second.]—Where a ship comes into collision with two vessels one after the other, there being a short interval between the two collisions, the shipowner will be entitled to limit his liability to £8 per ton, there being no loss of life, if the first collision is the substantial & efficacious cause of the second, & there is no separate act of negligence on the part of those in charge of pltfs.' ship in respect of the second collision.—THE CREADON (1886), 54 L. In a suit for limitation of liability instituted on behalf of the owner of the steamship:—Held: the whole of the damage so caused by such improper navigation as aforesaid to the ship & steam tug & goods on board the ship & steam tug was caused substantially at same time & on same occasion, & pltf., who was entitled to have his liability limited according to Merchant Shipping Act (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 54, was entitled to have his liability in respect of the whole of such damage limited to an amount not exceeding £8 per ton for each of his steamship's tonnage.—THE RAJAH (1872), L. her & the D., & sought to make the owners of the A. claim against the fund in the limitation action on the ground that both collisions were caused by the same improper act of navigation, viz. the starboarding:—Held: the S. had time & opportunity to correct the starboarding before striking the D., & the damage to the D. happened on a distinct occasion from the damage to the A. by collision with the M., & therefore the S. was separately liable over & above the fund paid into ct. in the limitation action.—THE SCHWAN, THE ALBANO, [1892] P. 419; 69 L. 8108. Conclusiveness of register.]—The owners of a German steam vessel instituted an action under Merchant Shipping Act (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 54, to limit their liability for damages occasioned by a collision. The vessel had three decks, & her crew were berthed below the spar deck. By Order in Council dated June 26, 1873, made under Merchant Shipping Act (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 60, it was directed that German steamships measured after Jan. 1, 1873, should be deemed to be of the tonnage mentioned in their registers in the same manner, & to the same extent, as the tonnage denoted in the certificate of registry of British ships was deemed to be their tonnage. In the register of this ship the crew space was deducted:—Held: (1) the Order in Council of June 26, 1873, did not make the certificate of registry conclusive evidence of the tonnage or of the propriety of deducting the space solely appropriated for berthing the crew; (2) under Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 21 (4), a closed in space solely appropriated to the berthing of the crew is to be excepted in estimating the tonnage only when it is on the upper deck & not when it is between the spar deck & the tonnage deck; (3) the crew space cannot in the case of a foreign, any more than of a British ship, be deducted under "Merchant Shipping Act, 1867 (c. 124)," s. 9, unless the provisions of that sect. as to inspection by a surveyor appointed by the Board of Trade, & the other conditions therein contained, have been complied with, therefore, as in the present case these conditions have not been complied with, the space appropriated for berthing the crew must not be deducted.—THE FRANCONIA (1878), 3 P. See 1894 Act, s. 503; 1900 Act, s. 1.

8128. Whether distribution stayed — Pending ascertainment of claim.]—In Feb. 1917, two Norwegian vessels, the C. & the K. O., came into collision & the C. sank. In Mar. 1917, the owners of the cargo laden on board the C. began an action against the owners of the K. O. in the Admlty. Ct. The action was heard in May, 1919, when both vessels were pronounced to blame, & accordingly it was adjudged that pltfs. were entitled to receive a moiety of the amount of their damage from defts. Thereupon defts., the owners of the K. O., commenced a limitation action against the owners of the C., the owners of her cargo, & all persons claiming to have received damage by reason of the collision. This action was heard in Feb. 1920, when a decree was pronounced limiting the liability of the owners of the K. O. to £8 per ton on the registered tonnage of the K. O. calculated in accordance with the provisions of 1894 Act.

h. Priority among claimants—Claims pari passu—Underwriters of ship, cargo owners & seamen.]—BURRELL v. SIMPSON & Co. (1877), 4 R. (Ct. of [illegible].) 177.—SCOT.

The decree provided that all claims were to be brought in within three months & that claims not so brought in would be excluded from sharing in the limitation fund. Claims were filed by the owners of the cargo on the C., but although the owners of the C. entered an appearance they took no further steps in the limitation proceedings. Meanwhile, however, in Feb. 1919, the owners of the C. had commenced an action in Norway against the owners of the K. O. & in June, 1920, when the reference was held in the limitation proceedings & the registrar made his report, the trial of the Norwegian action was still pending. The owners of the K. O. accordingly took out a summons asking that the report be not confirmed & that they might have leave to file a claim against the fund in respect of any liability they might incur under the Norwegian proceedings. The judge declined to postpone the distribution of the fund & dismissed the summons. Pltfs., the owners of the K. O., appealed:—Held: (1) pltfs. had no absolute right under the limitation sects. of 1894 Act to have the distribution of the fund stayed & to bring forward a claim when ascertained; (2) limitation proceedings do not contemplate claims by pltfs., & the owners of the K. O. could not file a claim against the fund in their own right; (3) had an application been made in proper form the ct. would have had a discretion to extend the time before distributing the fund, in order to allow pltfs. to ascertain their liability under the pending Norwegian judgment & to apply to the ct. to adjust the distribution of the fund so that pltfs. might obtain credit for the amount payable under the Norwegian judgment; (4) having regard to the lapse of time & to the fact that limitation proceedings contemplate that claims shall be brought in promptly & the distribution of the fund not be unreasonably delayed, the ct. had rightly exercised its discretion in refusing to postpone the distribution of the fund.—THE KRONPRINZ OLAV, [1921] P. 52; 90 L. 8129. Priority among claimants—Life claims & claims for goods—Assessment of life claims as if liability unlimited.]—Where the owner of a vessel which has wrongfully occasioned the loss of several of the crew of another vessel institutes proceedings under Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 514, that the amount of their liability may be determined, the damages sustained by the families of the deceased seamen are to be ascertained in the same way as if the liability of the owners were unlimited; & if that amount exceeds the liability of the owner in respect of the tonnage of the ship, then the whole amount of his liability is to be distributed rateably among them. The statutory limit of £30 as the amount of damages payable in respect of each family by sect. 510 of the Act, applies only to damages assessed under inquiries instituted by the Board of Trade.—GLAHOLM v. BARKER (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 598; 35 L. J. Ch. 657; 14 L. T. 880; 12 Jur. N. S. 764; 14 W. R. 1006; 2 Mar. L. C. 380.

8130. —— ——.]—Pltfs. in an action to limit their liability paid into ct. the sum of £7,862 0*s.* 10*d.*, being the amount of their statutory liability at the rate of £15 per ton. The amount so paid into ct. being insufficient to satisfy in full claims against pltfs. in respect of loss of life & loss of goods, the registrar, by his report, found that the claimants in respect of loss of life were entitled to be paid out of the sum in ct. an amount equal to £7 per ton, & that they & the claimants in respect of loss of goods should rank pari passu against the balance representing £8 per ton. On objection to the report:—Held: the report was right, as the ct. had power to marshal the assets, & the claimants in respect of loss of goods had no right in priority to the claimants in respect of loss of life against the sum representing £8 per ton; & in the special circumstances of the case, the costs of objection to the report must be borne by pltfs.—THE VICTORIA (1888), 13 P. A Norwegian ship of 6,028 gross registered tons, which was held to be alone to blame for a collision, was sold for 125,000 dollars & the proceeds paid into ct. in Canada. Claims amounting to 3,069,483 dollars, of which 469,467 dollars were in respect of loss of life & personal injuries, were proved against the shipowners, who had taken no proceedings to limit their liability. The Supreme Ct. of Canada made an order giving to the claimants in respect of loss of life & personal injuries a prior right over seven-fifteenths of the proceeds of sale:—Held: the order was wrongly made, & the proceeds should be divided amongst all the claimants pro rata.—CANADIAN PACIFIC RY. Div., where both ships have been injured & both ships have been held to blame, & have accordingly been condemned to pay the moiety of each other's damage, & either of the parties to the collision has applied to have his liability limited under Merchant Shipping Act (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 54, no set-off is allowed between the two amounts for which they are liable in damages, until the limitation of liability imposed by that statute has been applied.

The S. & V. came into collision, both ships were damaged, but the V. was sunk, with her cargo, & lost. In an action by the owners of the V., & counterclaim by the owners of the S., both ships were held to blame & condemned to pay the moiety of each other's damage. Under this judgment the damage payable by the S. was £14,000, & that payable by the V. was £2,000. The owners of the S. then brought an action in the Ch. (c. 57), s. 8.]—A decree of limitation of liability under 1844 Act, ss. 503, 504, under which all claims against the limitation fund are ordered to be brought in within a certain time, usually three months, does not override the provisions of Maritime Conventions Act, 1911 (c. 57), s. 8, & rival claimants to the limitation fund are entitled to object, if more than two years have elapsed since the cause of action, to the claims of persons who have not commenced proceedings within the statutory period of two years provided for in Maritime Conventions Act.

Generally speaking, however, if the cause for not issuing a writ in respect of the damage sustained has been the fact that limitation proceedings are pending, that would be sufficient ground for the exercise of the discretion vested in the ct. under sect. 8 to extend the time for the issue of a writ notwithstanding that the period of two years has expired.—THE DISPERSER, [1920] P. 228; 89 L. 8134. Claims against fund in court.]—In an action of collision in the Admlty. Div., where both ships have been injured & both ships have been held to blame, & have accordingly been condemned to pay the moiety of each other's damage, & either of the parties to the collision has applied to have his liability limited under Merchant Shipping Act (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 54, no set-off is allowed between the two amounts for which they are liable in damages, until the limitation of liability imposed by that statute has been applied. The S. & V. came into collision, both ships were damaged, but the V. was sunk, with her cargo, & lost. In an action by the owners of the V., & counterclaim by the owners of the S., both ships were held to blame & condemned to pay the moiety of each other's damage. Under this judgment the damage payable by the S. was £14,000, & that payable by the V. was £2,000. The owners of the S. then brought an action in the Ch. Div. for limitation of their liability, & paid into ct. £5,212, the aggregate amount of £8 a ton on her registered tonnage:—Held: the owners of the V. must prove for £14,000 against the fund in in ct., & must pay the £2,000 in full to the owners of the S.—CHAPMAN v. ROYAL NETHERLANDS STEAM NAVIGATION CO. Div. to limit their liability order the Merchant Shipping Act (Amendment) Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 554, & paid the amount of their liability into ct. The damage to the V. was greater than that to the K. & the fund in ct. was not sufficient to satisfy all the claims for which the owners of the K. were answerable in damages:—Held: the owners of the V. were entitled to prove against the fund for a moiety of their damage, less a moiety of the damage sustained by the K. & to be paid in respect of the balance due to then after such deduction, pari passu with the other clamants out of such fund.—STOOMVAART MAATSCHAPPIJ NEDERLAND v. PENINSULAR & ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION CO. 8136. —— By Crown.]—The Crown may claim against a fund paid into ct. by the owners of a ship in order to limit their liability under Merchant Shipping Acts, 1854 & 1862, by the general law, & also under Admiralty Suits Act, 1868 (c. 78), s. 3. A claim against a fund paid into ct. in a suit for limitation of liability under Merchant Shipping Acts, 1854 & 1862, is not necessarily excluded by the fact that the time fixed by the order of the ct. for entering claims has elapsed.—THE ZOE (1886), 11 P. 8138. —— Time for submitting.]—In an action for limitation of liability the usual advertisements were issued, intimating to all persons having any claim in respect of loss of life or damage to property that, if they did not come in & enter their claims within three months from the date of the decree, they would be excluded from sharing in the amount of £15 per ton standing in ct. to the credit of the action.

The claims entered in respect of loss of property more than exhausted the statutory liability of £8 per ton; but only six out of a possible eleven claims in respect of loss of life were entered within the limit of time, & these absorbed only a small portion of the statutory liability of £7 per ton:—Held: the ct. having exercised the power given by 1894 Act, s. 504, of fixing the time within which claimants should come in, the unappropriated balance of the fund must be paid back to pltfs. in the limitation suit, notwithstanding that all the possible life claims had not been entered, & the year had not elapsed within which, under Lord Campbell's Act, 1846 (c. 93), s. 3, an action in respect of such a claim could be commenced.—THE ALMA, [1903] P. 55; 72 L. 8139. —— By cargo-owners—In respect of settlement made out of court.]—Defts.' vessel came into collision with & sank another vessel carrying cargo belonging to pltfs. Actions were commenced by pltfs. & by the owners of the carrying vessel but in the action between the latter & defts.' vessel, the parties filed in the registry an agreement to a decree that both vessels were to blame & for the usual reference as to the damages. Defts. then brought an action for the limitation of their liability, & paid into ct. the amount of their liability under Merchant Shipping Acts. In their statement of claim they referred to the above-mentioned agreement, & in terms admitted that the collision was "in part caused by the improper navigation of their vessel." Pltfs., in their defence, did not notice this admission, or otherwise refer to the cause of the collision. The usual decree was made for limitation of liability, & the staying of pltfs.' action:—Held: (1) the agreement between the owners of the two vessels having been filed in the registry was, under R. S. C., Ord. 52, r. 23, equivalent to a decree of the ct., & the owners of the carrying vessel were not entitled to have such agreement rescinded for the purpose of proving against the fund in ct. for more than half the damage sustained by them; (2) there was no admission on the pleadings by pltfs. as defts. in the limitation action which precluded them from claiming to prove against the fund for the whole amount of the damage sustained by them, & in support of their proof an issue might be directed between them & the owners of the carrying vessel to determine whether defts.' vessel was alone to blame for the collision.—THE KARO (1887), 13 P. 8142. —— Whether claim barred—Order for discontinuance.]—An action having been brought by the owners of ship K. against the owners of ship A. for damages arising out of a collision, an agreement was drawn up between the parties that the action be "discontinued without costs on the ground of inevitable accident," & an order in those terms was drawn up in the Admiralty Registry. The owners of the cargo of ship K. having afterwards brought an action against the owners of ship A. for damages arising out of the same collision, both ships were held to blame, & the cargo owners were held entitled to half their damages. The owners of ship A. having obtained a decree limiting their liability, & having paid a sum into ct. the cargo owners filed their claim in the limitation action. The owners of ship K. having afterwards, with the consent of the owners of ship A., obtained a rescission of the order for discontinuance, claimed against the fund in the limitation action. The cargo owners having objected to this claim:—Held: the agreement & order for discontinuance, upon their true construction, did not amount to a release of all claims, & the owners of ship K. were not precluded from claiming against the fund. — KRONPRINZ (CARGO OWNERS) v. KRONPRINZ (OWNERS), THE ARDANDHU (1887), 12 App. Cas. 256; 56 L. ### SUB-SECT. 4.—STAY OF PROCEEDINGS IN OTHER COURTS.

8143. Whether court will stay proceedings.]—(1) Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 504, limiting the liability of a shipowner to the value of his ship & freight; & Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 514, giving the ct. of Ch. jurisdiction to stop actions & suits pending in any other ct. in relation to the same subject-matter, are applicable, notwithstanding the circumstance that an adverse claimant has obtained a definitive sentence or judgment of the Ct. of Admlty., condemning the ship; & the utmost to which the latter is entitled under such a judgment, in respect of the loss he has sustained, is to share rateably with the other claimants in the value of the ship & freight.

(2) This ct. has no control over the ship itself, & cannot prevent the party who has obtained such a judgment from proceeding to a sale of the ship, & retaining out of the proceeds such costs as he may be entitled to retain under the order of the Admlty. Ct.

(3) Subject, however, as above mentioned, the shipowner is entitled to an injunction, under Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 514, restraining the party who has obtained such a judgment from proceeding further in the Ct. of Admlty.—LEYCESTER v. LOGAN (1857), 3 K. & J. 446; 26 L. 8144. ——.]—Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 514, enables the Ct. of Ch., in cases where any liability has been, or is alleged to have been, incurred by the owner of a ship in respect of (inter alia) damage to, or loss of goods, & several claims are made or apprehended with regard to such liability, to entertain proceedings at the owner's suit to determine & distribute among the various claimants the amount of such liability with power to stop all actions or suits in relation to the same subject matter. Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (c. 10), s. 13, confers a similar power on the Ct. of Admlty. That ct. acting under the last-mentioned statute, made an order in certain Admlty. proceedings, at the instance of defts., stopping the present action, which was brought against them to recover damages for loss of the pltfs.' goods in consequence of the sinking of a ship belonging to defts. Defts. thereupon applied to this ct. for a rule to stay, but the ct. declined to interfere, being of opinion that the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (c. 76), s. 226, was not applicable to any case except where an order stopping an action or suit had been issued by a "superior ct. of law or equity," & seeing no reason to exercise their discretionary power at common law of staying proceedings.—MILBURN v. LONDON & SOUTH WESTERN RY. 8158. Claims against the fund were in due course filed by the owners of the Nedenes & the owners of the other ship, the Severini, & also by the owners of cargo on the Severini. The same solrs. presented the claims on behalf of the owners of both ships. The owners of cargo on the Severini, who were not parties to the collision action, then sought leave to administer four interrogatories to the owners of the Severini. Nos. 1 & 2 asked whether there had been, as between the owners of the two ships, a mutual abandonment of claim or a settlement on other terms. No. 3 inquired whether there had been any assignment of the claim of the owners, master, & crew of the Severini; & No. 4 asked by whom the particular solrs. were instructed to present the claim of the owners of the Severini. The registrar allowed Nos. 1 & 2, but disallowed Nos. 3 & 4. The registrar found that pltfs.' objections were well founded & allowed only a portion of defts., claim, & ordered each party to pay their own costs of the reference. From this order defts. appealed by motion:—Held: though there is a general rule of practice that pltf. in a limitation of liability suit must pay the costs, that practice is not invariable; the registrar has discretion in a proper case to make such order as to costs as he thinks just; & his order was right.—THE RIJNSTROON (1899), 80 L. By their defence, defts. did not admit that either of pltf. tugs had rendered any salvage service. The also set up an agreement by the second tug for £20, & alleged that any damage sustained by that tug was due to her own negligence. Finally they tendered as follows: "Defts. denying liability for more than £20, part thereof for the second tug, bring into ct. £100 for the second tug, & £50 for the first tug." The ct. found that both tugs had rendered salvage services; that there was no agreement with the second tug; that the damage that tug had sustained was due to her own negligence; & that each tug was entered to an award of £50. The ct., therefore, ordered the balance of £50 out of the tender to the second tug to be repaid to defts. under Ord. 22, r. 6 (c), & on the question of costs:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to their costs up to payment into ct.; defts. were entitled to those subsequent to that date, & pltfs., were entitled to any severable costs, subsequent to payment into ct., in respect of the issues on which they had succeeded.—THE BLANCHE, [1908] P. 259; 77 L. ### SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

8168. Nature—Distinguished from possessory lien.]—(1) A Scottish steamer ran down an English vessel in the Humber. An action was commenced in the Ct. of Admlty. in England, by the owners of the English vessel, against the owners of the steamer, & a warrant of arrest issued against the ship; but, before the ship could be arrested, she had sailed for Scotland. A suit was then commenced by the owners of the English vessel against the owner of the steamer, in the Ct. of Sessions in Scotland, for the damage, & the steamer was arrested under process of that ct., but subsequently released upon bail. Afterwards, & pending these proceedings, the steamer was sold, without notice to the purchaser of this unsatisfied claim against her. The proceedings in the Ct. of Session were still pending, when the steamer having come within the jurisdiction of England, was again arrested under process of the High Ct. of Admlty. in England, & an action for damage commenced in that ct., for the same cause of action as was still pending in Scotland, instructions being sent to Scotland to abandon the proceedings in the Ct. of Session. The owner of the steamer appeared under protest in the Admlty. Ct., & pleaded, that he was a purchaser for value without notice:—Held: as, by the civil law, a maritime lien does not include or require possession, but being the foundation of proceedings in rem, a process requisite only to perfect a right inchoate from the moment the lien attaches, such lien travels with the thing into whosesoever possession it may come, & when carried into effect by a proceeding in rem, relates back to the period when it first attached; the steamer was liable for the damage committed by her, though in the hands of a purchaser without notice of the damage, or the proceedings instituted against her.

A maritime lien does not include or require possession. The word is used in maritime law not in the strict legal sense in which we understand it in cts. of common law, in which case there could be no lien where there was no possession, actual or constructive, but to express, as if by analogy, the nature of claims which neither presuppose nor originate in possession (JARVIS, C.J.).

(2) Semble: such lien arising out of damage is not indelible, but may be lost by negligence or delay, where the right of third parties are compromised.

(3) A maritime lien & a proceeding in rem are correlative; wherever a proceeding in rem is

8175. Recognition out of England—By all civilised nations.]—All civilised nations recognise the validity of maritime lien, & will enforce it when it has been declared by a foreign ct.; but it is essential that it should appear from the proceedings of the foreign ct. that the object of the suit was the sale of the ship, & not a personal remedy against the captain or owners.

Pltfs. brought an action & obtained judgment in the Tribunal of Commerce at Lisbon against the captain & owners of a British ship for damages for injury caused by a collision with pltf.'s ship. The Portuguese cts. recognise no distinction between actions in personam & actions in rem. Deft.'s ship having come into a British ct., pltfs. commenced an action in rem against the ship, claiming to enforce the judgment of the Portuguese ct. against it, & arrested the ship:—Held: the action in the Portuguese ct. was a personal action, & the writ in the present action & all proceedings under it must be set aside, the ct. having no jurisdiction to enforce a judgment in a personal action by proceedings in rem.—THE CITY OF MECCA (1881), 6 P. SUB-SECT. 2.—DAMAGE.

A. In General.

8178. Nature & extent of lien.]—The successful suitor in a cause of damage has a lien upon the property condemned, to the full extent of the owner's interest in the vessel. His lien in paramount to the claim of a mtgee. or bondholder prior to the period when the damage is done & also extends in case of a deficiency of proceeds, to subsequent accretions in the value of the ship arising from repairs effected at the expense of the owner. Aliter, where money has been advanced & repairs effected by a stranger, & a bottomry bond has been bonâ fide given for the amount of such repairs. Semble: in such case the subsequent bondholder would have a lien upon the proceeds to the extent of the increased value of the vessel arising from the repairs.—THE ALINE (1839), 1 Wm. Rob. 111; 166 E. R. 514.

(2) It is a reasonable & salutary rule that when a ship is so carelessly navigated as to occasion injury to other vessels which are free from blame the owners of the injured craft should have a remedy against the corpus of the offending ship & should not be restricted to a personal claim

Circumstances in which it was held, that a delay of three years to arrest the ship was not an unreasonable delay, the owners of the damaged vessel having used reasonable diligence to discover her whereabouts.—DEAN v. RICHARDS, THE EUROPA (1863), 2 Moo. 8187. —— ——.] — UTOPIA (OWNERS) v. PRIMULA (OWNERS & MASTER), THE UTOPIA, No. 8215, post.

8188. —— In respect to place where damage occurs.]—A foreign steam vessel, with engines broken down, after being safely towed into the Mersey by salvors, was run into by another vessel, &, to prevent her sinking in deep water, second salvors endeavoured to beach her, with the result that she came in contact with, & damaged, a landing stage belonging to the Mersey Dock Board. As a wreck obstructing the navigation, the Board, under their statutory powers, took possession of her, raised, & sold her, paying the net proceeds into ct. after deducting expenses. The proceeds were insufficient to meet the claims of the two salvors & the claim of the Dock Board for the damage done to the landing stage.

On the question of priorities:—Held: (1) the claim of the Dock Board came first, then that of the second salvors, & lastly that of the first salvors, for, as between the Dock Board & the salvors, the Board had a maritime lien for the damage done, & whether the Board had a maritime lien or not, the right of the Board to proceed in rem overrode the prior lien of the salvors, as being based on a claim against the wrong doing vessel ex delicto, involving no option in the sufferer, whereas the salvors in voluntarily undertaking to render services incurred the risk of subsequent claims attaching; (2) as between the two salvors, the ordinary rule applied giving the claim of the second salvors precedence on the ground that their exertions tended to preserve the res for the benefit of earlier claimants.

(3) There is a maritime lien for this kind of damage if it had occurred on the high seas & it seems to follow that it was intended the law should be the same as to damage done by a ship elsewhere; & therefore whether the damage . . . was done in the body of a county or not is immaterial (GORELL BARNES, J.).

(4) There is a right to arrest a ship to obtain reparation for damage done by her which is not affected by prior claims against her arising from hypothecation (GORELL BARNES, J.).—THE VERITAS, [1901] P. 304; 70 L. 8190. —— —— Requisition during war.]—While under requisition by, & manned & operated by, the United States Govt., defts.' steamship was in collision with & did damage to pltfs.' steamship. After the vessel had been released from requisition pltfs. commenced an action in rem for their collision damage. In that action defts. pleaded (inter alia) that "at the time when the collision is alleged to have taken place the Sylvan Arrow was under requisition by and under the sole control & management of the Govt. of the United States & was being navigated by persons who were the servants of the Govt. & for whose negligence defts. were & are in no wise responsible. . . . Defts. say that the action is not maintainable in rem by reason of the facts set out" above. On the hearing of this question as a preliminary point of law:—Held: defts. had surrendered their vessel to the United States Govt. under compulsion, in no sense could it be said that the master & crew derived their authority from defts., & in the circumstances no maritime lien attached to the vessel by reason of the collision, & her owners were not, either through their vessel or otherwise, liable to pltfs.—THE SYLVAN ARROW, [1923] P. 220; 92 L. 8205. Proceeds of sale—In hands of trustee in bankruptcy.]—In Nov. 1866, the smack Emerald & the smack Welcome came into collision & the Emerald was lost. S., the owner of the Emerald, afterwards commenced proceedings against C., the owner of the Welcome, in the Ct. of Admlty., for the recovery of damages, but negotiations having been entered into between the parties S., on Jan. 17, 1867, received a bill of exchange accepted by C., & payable three months after date, for £216, "for statutory loss sustained through the collision." In the same month of Jan. S. arrested the Welcome in the suit he had commenced in the Ct. of Admlty. to enforce his lien, but after retaining possession for about seventeen days, he withdrew, & upon C.'s application the proceedings were dismissed with costs. On Apr. 20, C. executed a deed of assignment of all his estate to trustees for creditors, & the bill of exchange, accepted by C., was dishonoured upon presentation. In the following month the Welcome was sold by C. without the direction of the trustees who, however, received the proceeds:—Held: S. had not a lien on the proceeds of the sale in the hands of the trustees.—Re CLARKE, Ex p. SNELL (1867), 16 W. 8209. ——.]—The owners of a steam wherry, which had been arrested in a cause of damage, intervened as defts., & obtained a release of their vessel on bail. Subsequently an answer was filed on their behalf which (inter alia), alleged that at the time of the collision with respect to which the suit was brought the wherry was hired to a charterer, under an arrangement whereby one-fifth of the vessel's earnings was to be paid to defts., but all expenses connected with her employment were to be borne by such charterer, who had absolute control over her management, & during the continuance of the agreement acted on his own behalf, & not in any way as agent or servant of the defts. The answer then further alleged that the wherry was not under the management or control of defts. so as to render them liable for any loss or damage sustained by pltfs. in the collision. Ct., it was proved by a witness, who was the principal deft. in the action at law, that the damage proceeded for was occasioned by acts done by him on his own responsibility, & in the assertion of a right claimed by him as consignee for sale of the vessel in question, & not as the agent on behalf of the owners; whereupon the judge of the Ct. of Admlty. held, that the suit could not be maintained, but, inasmuch as the defence thus disclosed had not been specifically pleaded, declined to give defts. their costs, or to go into the special defence, though his judgment thereon was asked for by the deft.'s counsel.—YEO v. TATEM, THE ORIENT (1871), L. 8215. ——.]—Where the owners of a wreck remained in possession thereof, but the part authority undertook & neglected the duty of indicating its position so as to secure ships entering the harbour where she lay from the danger of collision with her:—Held: neither the owners nor the wreck were liable for a collision which ensued. The control & management thereof had been legitimately transferred by the owners to the part authority, acting within the apparent scope of its powers, & in the absence of negligence by the owner no maritime lien arose.

It was suggested in argument that, as the action against the Utopia is an action in rem, the ship may be held liable, though there be no liability in the owners. Such contention appears to their lordships to be contrary to principles of maritime law now well recognised. No doubt at the time of action brought, a ship may be made liable in an action in rem, though its then owners are not, because, by reason of the negligence of the owners, or their servants, causing a collision, a maritime lien on their vessel may have been established, & that lien binds the vessel in the hands of subsequent owners. But the foundation of the lien is the negligence of the owners or their servants at the time of the collision, & if that be not proved no lien comes into existence, & the ship is no more liable than any other property which the owners at the time of collision may have possessed (SIR FRANCIS JEUNE).—UTOPIA (OWNERS) v. PRIMULA (OWNERS & MASTER), THE UTOPIA, [1893] A. 8220. ——.]—(1) When a shipwright has received a vessel into his yard & repaired her, his rights are subject to all existing obligations then complete & due against the vessel.

(2) Claims for salvage take precedence of a shipwright's lien in respect of subsequent repairs to the vessel.

(3) The shipwright's lien is postponed to masters' & seamen's wages earned prior, but not to such wages earned subsequent to the time when the vessel, entered the shipwright's yard.

(4) The seamen & master are, in the case of a foreign vessel, entitled to an allowance for return to their own country, & this right takes priority also of such shipwright's claim.

(5) The shipwright's lien takes precedence of all claims in respect of necessaries supplied subsequent to the time when the vessel entered the shipwright's yard.

(6) Necessaries do not ab origine give a lien but only a statutory remedy against the ship.

& the owners of the cargo. The G. was taken to Constantinople, where no security being forthcoming, she was arrested in the Turkish Cts. She was, however, released on the terms that if she was allowed to sail to Alexandria she should be rearrested there, & accordingly an order was obtained by pltfs. for a saisie conservatoire of the ship on her arrival at Alexandria. After the arrest at Constantinople had been taken off the owner of the G. became bkpt., & when the ship arrived at Alexandria she was seized by the trustee in bkpcy. Pltfs. proceeded to arbn. in London under the terms of the agreement & obtained an award against both ship & cargo, but the cargo owners only were represented at the arbn. Shortly afterwards the trustee in bkpcy., with the approval of the Mixed Tribunal of Commerce, sold the ship to defts. & guaranteed that she was free of all charges on the part of creditors of the bkpt. owner. Under the Egyptian Code Civil Mixte there is no right in rem or maritime lien for salvage. Pltfs. claimed in the bkpcy. proceedings the amount of the salvage award, but the trustee in bkpcy. took up the position that the master had no authority to sign the arbn. agreement & referred the claim to the Egyptian Ct. When the ship came to this country pltfs. issued a writ in rem & defts. gave an undertaking for bail to avoid the arrest of the ship & moved to set the writ aside:—Held: (1) as the services were rendered under "no cure no pay" terms they gave rise to a maritime lien; (2) the sale under the authority of the Egyptian Ct. was not equivalent to a sale in an action in rem but was a sale cum onere; (3) pltfs.' rights were not merged in the unperformed award; & (4) as the claim in the bkpcy. proceedings afforded only a partial remedy, if any, & was entirely different from the relief obtainable in England, there was nothing inequitable or vexatious in allowing pltfs. to enforce their rights in rem against the ship in the present action.—THE GOULANDRIS, [1927] P. 182; 96 L. But the case becomes one of ordinary principal & agent, where he makes a special contract, in itself ultra vires, in order to fulfil which he incurs special expenses; if the owner adopts the benefit of that contract, he must, in equity, also bear its burthens.

Where, therefore, the master of an ordinary seeking ship entered into a charterparty, under seal, to carry troops from the Mauritius to England, & stipulated, on his own responsibility, in the charterparty, that he would make certain alterations in the ship, in order to enable him to carry the troops, & at the Cape of Good Hope entered into another charterparty, not under seal, to a similar effect, & made the specified alterations, & paid money, & drew bills to meet the expenses necessary to the making of these alterations, & the voyage was performed:—Held: in equity, the master was first entitled out of the freight earned under these charterparties to be repaid the sums advanced, & to be indemnified against the bills, & the owner, or his mtgee., was only entitled to the net freight after deducting these charges.—BRISTOW v. WHITMORE (1861), 9 H. 8247. General rule—Indelible & perpetual lien—Following ship wherever she goes.]—This question arises on the admission of a defensive allegation offered by the owners of this vessel, in answer to a petition for wages. It appears that at the time this person entered into the service of the ship at New York as a mariner, she was the property of American owners, but that the vessel has been since transferred to British subjects. Now although it is a settled principle for the protection of mariners generally, that wages form an indelible & perpetual lien on the ship, & follow her wherever she goes, it is easy to see the great inconvenience that might arise from carrying this principle to its full extent in the case of foreign purchases. Where an English ship is purchased by English merchants, the purchasers have an opportunity of becoming acquainted with all the circumstances of the antecedent history of the vessel; but in making purchases of this description, it is scarcely possible for them to inform themselves of all the transactions, regular or irregular, in which she may have been engaged. . . . To what country claimant belongs is not stated. As a British subject he could not regularly embark in such an undertaking under this military commander without the authority of his govt.; & if he is an American, his own govt. had prohibited such an engagement by public proclamation. If he is a subject of some other country, the general objection holds that the expedition itself was the unauthorised act of a private person, out of which no legal claims can arise. For that part of the voyage which was legal, it is admitted that the wages had been paid in advance, & I am clear therefore that if this allegation is proved, it is of a nature to bar the claim which is set up, especially against the present holders of the vessel, who come in as innocent successors to the former owners, & knowing nothing of her antecedent history (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE LEANDER (1808), Edw. 35; 165 E. 8264. Cargo—Lien of seamen—Whether confined to cargo as freight.]—A ship, designed on a trading voyage from Liverpool to Africa & back, sailed with goods for barter, & on her voyage home was, with her cargo, totally destroyed: the ship & cargo were the property of the same owner, & were insured. In an action for wages against the owner:—Held: in conformity with the general rule of law, freight is the mother of wages, the summary petition was inadmissible. A mariner has no lien for wages on the cargo, as cargo; his lien is upon the ship & freight. Qu.: whether if any cargo were saved it could be held to represent the freight.—THE LADY DURHAM (1835), 3 Hag. (2) Where there is no maritime lien on ship there can be no lien on freight in respect of the same debt.

By a charterparty for the hire of a steamship it was agreed that the charterers should provide & pay for coals. In the course of a voyage it became necessary to procure coals to enable the ship to prosecute the voyage & earn freight. The master, who had notice of the terms of the charterparty, obtained the coals & drew on the charterers for the value. The bill having been dishonoured the master was sued on it, & then instituted a cause of disbursements in the Ct. of Admlty. against ship & freight:—Held: as the shipowner was not personally liable for the disbursements the master had no maritime lien on ship, & although his claim for payment out of the freight was supported by considerations of equity, he had no lien on freight, since by the practice of the Admlty. The captain claimed a lien upon, or a right of set-off against, the amount of the bill, for disbursements which he had made on account of the ship, & threatened to bring an action against the acceptor for the money due on the bill. (b) What Are Disbursements.

8289. General rule—All proper expenditure upon ship—Whether articles obtained by immediate or promised payment.]—(1) The master's maritime lien on the freight for his wages & disbursements in priority to the claims of the mtgees. is not affected by the fact of his being also part owner of the vessel.

(2) Disbursements made by the master include all proper expenditure made by him upon the ship, whether the particular articles be obtained by immediate or promised payment; therefore, liabilities incurred by him for articles expended for the benefit of the ship are to be considered as disbursements, & will be allowed where the ct. has a fund in its custody legally liable for all necessaries.

(3) In a suit by a master, who was also part owner, against ship & freight for wages & disbursements, the ct. confirmed the registrar's report allowing the master's claim, in priority to the mtgees. in possession, for his wages & the following disbursements, viz.: (a) for tobacco & slops supplied to seamen, who afterwards deserted, on the ground that, these being a part of seamen's wages, the master was entitled to be reimbursed for them, notwithstanding the fact that he might have made a small profit in supplying them; (b) for certain items which had not been paid, but which the registrar allowed, with a recommendation that no order for the payment thereof be made until the master deposited in the registry vouchers for the payment, or gave satisfactory evidence that the accounts had been paid; (c) for a bill of exchange drawn by the master, of the dishonour of which he had received no notice, & for which it was contended he was therefore no longer liable, on the ground that, as the whole principle of notice of dishonour is founded upon the notion of benefiting the drawer, & as in this case the drawer had not only not been injured by the absence of notice, but had taken no such objection as a defence, it was not competent to defts., mtgees. in possession representing the acceptor, to set up an objection on the ground of want of notice, & to contend that the drawer was no longer liable on the bill.—THE FERONIA (1868), L. The bill was not accepted & judgment on it was recovered against the master. Subsequently the master brought an article of wages & disbursements against the vessel in this ct., & sought therein to recover the amount of the judgment against him:—Held: so much of the amount of the bill as represented the price of the coal was not a disbursement recoverable in the action.—THE TURGOT (1886), 11 P. 8297. —— Ordinary course of employment.]—(1) Defts., shipowners in London, contracted with a coal merchant for the supply of bunker coal to their vessel then lying in the port of London, & about to sail on a voyage to the Mediterranean. As part of the contract payment was to be made by bill of exchange drawn by the master on the defendants in favour of the coal merchants. The bill so drawn by the master was accepted by defts. but dishonoured at maturity; & pltf., the master of the vessel, thereupon issued a writ in rem, arrested the ship, & claimed the amount of the bill, notarial charges, & the costs of an action against him as drawer. Defts. did not appear; but on the intervention of prior mtgees. of the vessel:—Held: the liability of pltf. as drawer of the bill of exchange was not a liability "properly incurred by him (as master) on account of the ship" within Merchant Shipping Act, 1889 (c. 46), s. 1, & therefore, no lien had been created in his favour to the prejudice of the mtgees.

(2) It is common knowledge that a master has only authority to pledge his owner's credit if it is necessary that the goods should be supplied to the ship, & if the master can not communicate with the owners before ordering the goods. The disbursements, therefore, in respect of which the master had a lien on the ship were those disbursements which he made or made himself liable for on account of necessaries for the ship for the purposes of navigation, which necessaries he must obtain immediately if he was to carry out his duties as master, the shipowners not being there to give the order, & the master not being able to communicate with them (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—THE ORIENTA, [1895] P. 49; 64 L. 8298. —— ——.]—Defts., owners of a steamship, transferred the possession of it to a Glasgow firm subject to conditions in a contract of sale, by which defts. were to remain registered owners, & in effect to become mtgees. until payment of the purchase-money. The Glasgow firm appointed pltf. master, & he, whilst on a voyage to the river Plate on account of that firm, & not having notice of the contract of sale, drew two bills of exchange on the Glasgow firm for bunker coal supplied to the vessel at the time the bills were drawn, but in pursuance of a coaling contract previously made in this country between the Glasgow firm & the coal merchants. The bills were dishonoured at maturity, &, the Glasgow firm having suspended payment, defts., as unpaid vendors, retook possession of the vessel. They then settled with pltf. an action in rem brought, in the name of pltf. by the coal merchants, under an irrevocable mandate, executed by pltf. authorising them to exercise, in his name, the right of lien, which he claimed under 1894 Act, s. 167, against the vessel in respect of his liability as drawer of the two bills of which the coal merchants were the holders:—Held: (1) the settlement of the action was void as against the coal merchants to whom pltf. was liable on the bills, & this liability having been incurred by pltf. as master in the ordinary course of his employment on account of the ship, within the meaning of the statute, he had a valid maritime lien, which could be enforced against the vessel, though the coals were supplied on the credit of the Glasgow firm, & not of defts., whose property the ship was.

(2) As maritime liens are recognised by law, persons who are allowed by those interested in a vessel to have possession of her for the purpose of using or employing her in the ordinary manner, must be deemed to have received authority from those interested in her to subject the vessel to claims in respect of which maritime liens may attach to her (GORELL BARNES, J.).—THE RIPON CITY, [1897] P. 226: 66 L. The bills were dishonoured by the charterers, & in Aug. 1880, the master was served with a writ in an action brought to recover the amount of the bills. Judgment in this action was recovered against the master in July, 1881. In Oct. 1881, the steamship was sold, & the master in Nov. 1882, instituted an action of disbursements against her & her freight. The purchasers appeared & put in bail. At the hearing of the action the judgment recovered against pltf. in Aug. 1881, remained still in force & unsatisfied, & pltf. claimed to recover as a disbursement the amount for which he was liable under it:—Held: (1) the liability of pltf. to satisfy the judgment against him must be considered as a disbursement in respect of which a maritime lien existed under Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (c. 10), s. 10; (2) the right to enforce such lien had not been lost by any want of reasonable diligence on the part of pltf., & that his claim must be pronounced for.—THE FAIRPORT (1882), 8 P. 8309. —— —— ——.]—(1) The term "wages" in 1894 Act, s. 167, will include a bonus of £50 promised to a master by his owners during a voyage, in addition to his agreed wages, on condition that he remained with the vessel, & satisfied his owners that he had done all in his power to promote the interests of the ship.

(2) The costs incurred by a master in unsuccessfully defending an action on a dishonoured bill of exchange drawn by him on his owners for the price of coals supplied to the ship will not be deemed "liabilities properly incurred by him (as master) on account of the ship" within 1894 Act, s. 167, unless the defence was reasonably necessary in the interests of the ship.

Being the master, he drew the bill by way of payment for the coals which he knew the ship had received, & in considering the question whether he was justified in defending the action or making the ship liable for the costs of that defence, I have to consider whether it was necessary in the interests of the ship to have defended that action. There my difficulty arises, because I do not see why it was. He might perfectly well have allowed judgment to go by default, knowing that he could recover from the ship, & that he had a lien (JEUNE, P.).—THE ELMVILLE (No. 2). [1904] P. 422; 74 L. J. Claims by several parties—Settlement pro rata—Proceeds insufficient.]—A foreign ship was arrested in a suit for necessaries; no appearance being given for the owners, the ct. put pltf. in possession of her by a first decree after the usual defaults. She was subsequently arrested by three other parties in similar suits, & the proceeds were not sufficient to meet the total claims. The ct., on motion, by interlocutory judgment, decreed a pro rata division between all parties.—THE DESDEMONA (1856), Sw. 158; 28 L. T. O. S. 192; 5 W. R. 167; 166 E. R. 1072.

8334. In port abroad.]—In order to succeed in an action for repairs, the authority to make the contract must be clear, & when repairs have been made on a foreign ship in a foreign port & by foreign contractors the law of the foreign State as to the existence of a lien therefor must govern.—REID WRECKING CO., LTD. v. THE JOHN B. between the quay & the vessel, & was attached to the vessel by chain & rope painters, & was floated close to her to enable the workmen to execute the external repairs about the hull. Also, that there were on board of the vessel, chisels, chains, & other implements & materials belonging to H. These statements are disputed; but supposing them to be true, I think them quite inadequate to establish that the vessel was in the possession of H. so as to give him a possessory lien over her (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE SCIO (1867), L. R. 1 A. & E. 353; 16 L. T. 642; 2 Mar. L. C. 527.

8346. —— Vessel in public dock—Ship's officers on board.]—Shipowners handed over their vessel to ship repairers for the purpose of repairs, but during a part of the time kept certain officers on board. The repairers had on board a number of workmen during working hours, & also employed a watchman, who was, however, frequently absent. The vessel was at first placed in a public dock, the dues for which were paid by the repairers, but later she was moved into the repairers' own yard. On a summons adjourned into ct. for argument:—Held: a ship may be under the control & in the possession of a repairer in a public dock, & on the facts the owners had handed over the possession & control to the repairers, who were entitled to maintain a possessory lien.—THE RELLIM (1922), 39 T. 8350. Rights as against Court of Admiralty—Ship in possession of officer of court.]—The right of a tradesman to retain the materials of a ship left in his possession for the purpose of repairs until the repairs are paid for, does not extend against the authority of the Ct. of Admlty., when the ship is in possession of its officer under a warrant of the Ct.—THE HARMONIE (1841), 1 Wm. Rob. 178; 166 E. R. 539.

8351. Lien arising through operation of statutory powers—Under private dock Act—Whether lien affected by provisions for Limitation of liability—Mersey Docks.]—By the Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Act, 1858 (c. xcii), s. 94, when damage is done to any lock or other work of the Mersey Docks & Harbour Board through the negligence of those on board of any vessel, the vessel may be detained until such damage is paid or a deposit is made of the amount claimed by the Board, which deposit the Board are authorised to retain until the whole amount of the damage shall have been ascertained & paid, & provision is made for the application of the deposit in satisfaction of the claim.

1894 Act, s. 503, limits the liability of shipowners where, without their actual fault or privity, loss or damage is caused to any other vessel by the improper navigation of the ship to £8 per ton; & s. 504 provides that in the case of several claims the owner of the ship which has caused the damage may apply to the High Ct. "& that Ct. may determine the amount of the owner's liability & may distribute that amount rateably among the several claimants."

1900 Act, s. 1, extends the limitation of liability set by s. 503 of 1894 Act to all cases where, without the actual fault or privity of the shipowners, loss or damage is caused to property of any kind, whether on land or on water, by the improper navigation of the ship.

The steamship Countess, which was lying in a dock belonging to the Board, negligently went ahead instead of astern & crashed through the dock gates into the river, carrying with her a number of barges, some of which were sunk. The Countess was holed & had to be beached, & the Board's assistant marine surveyor having certified that she was a danger to the safe navigation of the port, the Board took charge of her under the powers of Mersey Docks & Harbour Act, 1912, & repaired her at a cost of £1,000. The damage done to the Board's dock amounted to £10,000 & the damage done to the barges to £55,000. The statutory amount of the Countess's liability under the Merchant Shipping Acts at £8 per ton was £4,468. The Board detained the Countess under their statutory powers in respect of the damage done to the dock. Numerous actions having been commenced by the barge owners, the shipowners commenced a limitation action in which they claimed to limit their liability to the amount ascertained under the Merchant Shipping Acts & to have that amount distributed rateably among the claimants, & in that action an order was made staying the barge-owners' actions. They also commenced an action against the Board for delivery up of the vessel & damages for detention. Ultimately the vessel was released on payment by the shipowners into Ct. of £5,500, representing (a) the statutory amount of their liability, & (b) the expenses incurred by the Board in connection with the repair & detention of the vessel. No question arose as to the latter sum. The Board claimed payment of their claim for damages, up to the limit of the shipowners' statutory liability, out of the fund in ct. in priority to the claims of the barge owners by virtue of their right to detain the vessel, & the sum representing the vessel, under their private Act of 1858. The bargeowners claimed that the fund ought to be distributed rateably among the several claimants, including the Board, according to the amounts of their claims:—Held: (1) the exercise by the Board of their statutory power to detain the ship conferred on them a possessory lien; (2) 1900 Act, s. 1, of which impliedly incorporated s. 504 of 1894 Act, neither expressly nor by implication affected the lien of the Board, beyond limiting the amount for which the lien could be exercised; (3) the ct., in distributing the statutory amount of the shipowners' liability rateably among the claimants, ought to have regard to the priorities as well as to the amounts of the claims; consequently, the whole of the fund should be paid out to the Board.—MERSEY DOCKS & HARBOUR BOARD v. HAY, THE COUNTESS, [1923] A. Pltf. did work & expended money in discharging the cargo, & brought it to a place of safety, where he took possession of it. The hull broke up, & became a wreck. The expenditure by pltf. was not for the purpose of enabling the shipowner to perform his contract & to earn freight, but was an extraordinary expenditure for the purpose of saving the property at risk, namely, the cargo:—Held: pltf. had a lien on the cargo for his charges as against the owner, though such charges were incurred without authority from the owner, the claim being analogous to that for general average or salvage.—HINGSTON v. WENDT (1876), 1 Q. When finished, the account was sent in with this item included. No objection was made to this item, but time was required for payment. The shipwright who claimed & enforced his lien on the ship for payment, urged the removal of the ship, saying that it was unnecessarily occupying his dock, that he had other ships waiting to go in, & finally, that from a certain day he should charge £21 a day for the use of the dock:—Held: these facts did not constitute an implied contract on the part of the shipowner to pay the additional charge.—SOMES v. BRITISH EMPIRE SHIPPING CO. The vessel having been taken to the docks, was there entered in the name of one of the engineers; &, whilst shipwrights & other agents of debtor were occasionally or constantly on board, the vessel remained in the possession of the engineers till the boat was ready to make a trial trip. In the interim the engineers had been paid £360, partly in cash, & partly by debtor's acceptance, which they discounted. SUB-SECT. 7.—NECESSARIES.

8443. General rule.]—(1) Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (c. 10), s. 5, does not create a maritime lien for necessaries at the time the necessaries are supplied, & a ship does not become chargeable with a debt for necessaries until a suit is actually instituted. All valid charges on the ship to which any person other than the owner is liable are entitled to take precedence of such debt.

(2) A British colonial vessel was mortgaged by her owners to B. The mtge. was duly registered under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104). In Feb. 1868, whilst lying in the port of London, applts., on the order of the master, did work & furnished supplies to the ship necessary to put her in a seaworthy condition. In July, 1868, B. executed an instrument transferring the mtge. to resp. This transfer was without valuable consideration, & was not registered, being made to enable resp. to take charge of the ship for B., the mtgee. In the same month resp. took possession of the ship. Applts. having instituted a suit against the ship to recover the amount due to them for the work & supplies, resp. intervened. At the time of the institution of the suit the ship was under the arrest of the ct., at the instance of two of her crew who had instituted a cause of wages; the owners of the ship were domiciled in Nova Scotia. The ship having been sold, the proceeds were found insufficient to satisfy the claim of applts., the material men, & the mtge. debt:—Held: resp., the assignee of the mtgee., was entitled to have his mtge. debt satisfied before applts. were paid the amount of their claim.—JOHNSON v. BLACK, THE TWO ELLENS (1872), L. R. 4 P. C. 161; 8 Moo. P. C. C. N. S. 398; 41 L. J. Adm. 33; 26 L. T. 1; 20 W. R. 592; 1 Asp. M. L. C. 208; 17 E. R. 361, P. C.

J. Adm. 119; 13 W. R. 1000.

8446. —— Money advanced to pay dock dues.]—Pltfs., in an action of necessaries against a foreign ship, having at the request of the master advanced money to pay dock dues for the ship at the port of discharge, were held to be entitled to have the amount they had so advanced paid out of the proceeds of the ship in priority to the claim of a bottomry bondholder who had advanced money on bottomry at the port of loading.—THE ST. 8447. Priority inter se.]—Pltfs. instituted in the High Ct. an action in rem for necessaries against the owners of a foreign steamship, & arrested the vessel the same day.

Three other actions for necessaries were subsequently commenced against the owners of the same vessel in a county ct., &, after judgment in these actions had been obtained by consent, pltfs. obtained judgment by default for the amount of their claim, with interest & costs, but without prejudice to other claims against the vessel, & reserving all questions as to priorities

The vessel was sold, with the consent of pltfs., in a wages action, which admittedly had priority, the proceeds paid into ct., the three county ct. actions transferred to the High Ct., & the question of priorities referred to the registrar.

Pltfs., in respect of the balance of the proceeds, which was insufficient to meet all the claims, & as against the other necessaries actions, claimed priority on the ground that they held security by reason of the relation back of their judgment to the date of the institution of the action & of the arrest:—Held: the claimants in the necessaries actions were entitled to be paid out of the balance of the proceeds pro rata, for, in such cases, the ct. holds the property, not only for first pltf., but also for, at least, all creditors of the same class, who assert their claims before any unconditional decree is pronounced. Semble: a decree in unconditional terms would so long as the funds remained in the hands of the ct., be modified so as to let in others, who, without laches, put forward claims of a like character.—THE AFRICANO, [1894] P. 141; 63 L. 8448. —— Supplies while ship under arrest—No priority over other necessaries.]—In distributing the proceeds of a vessel sold under the order of the ct., the claims of a necessaries man who has supplied ballast to the ship will not be preferred to other necessaries claims, notwithstanding that the vessel could not have been discharged or sold had not the ballast been supplied.—THE RENE (1922), 128 L. 8449. As against master's wages & disbursements.]—A master & part owner of a foreign ship ordered necessaries for the ship. The necessaries were supplied, & the master became liable for the payment of same:—Held: the persons who supplied the necessaries were entitled to be paid for the necessaries out of the proceeds of the ship & freight in priority to a claim of the master for wages & disbursements.—THE JENNY LIND (1872), L. R. 3 A. & E. 529; 41 L. J. Adm. 63; 26 L. T. 591; 20 W. R. 895; 1 Asp. M. L. C. 294.

8456. —— Necessaries including wages of crew—Paid at request of owner.]—(1) A claim by pltf. in an action for necessaries brought under Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (c. 10), sect. 4 (or, semble, under sect. 5), even though it includes wages paid to the ship's crew at the request of the owner, is not entitled to precedence of a mtgee.'s claim.

(2) Semble: precedence might have been gained by obtaining prior permission from the ct. to make the payment.—THE LYONS (1887), 57 L. T. 818; 6 Asp. M. L. C. 199.

8457. —— French hypothèque.]—The question of priority as between a claim by a necessaries man & a claim under a French hypothèque on a French ship arrested & sold in an action in rem in this country, must be determined according to the law of this country. But the nature of the right created by the French hypothèque must be determined according to French law, & the ct. will, in the absence of clear evidence that, according to French law, the right created by a French hypothèque is no higher than the mere right to proceed in rem, assume that the hypothèque does give a higher right & will postpone the claim of a necessaries man, who has no possessory lien on the ship, to the claim under the French hypothèque.—THE COLORADO, [1923] P. 102; 92 L. (2) A ship's agent was appointed by the master on his arrival at B. He had no previous knowledge of either master or owner, but made no inquiries as to how he was to be repaid his advances for necessaries. He allowed the vessel to be placed in the hands of a shipwright to be repaired, & when her value was by this means increased, caused her to be arrested:—Held: he was not entitled to be paid his claim in priority to the shipwright.

(3) Where there are several claimants against the proceeds of a vessel in the registry, & she has been sold at the suit of one, the costs of such sale will be paid before all claims, as such sale was for the benefit of all.—THE PANTHEA (1871), 25 L. T. 389; 1 Asp. M. L. C. 133.

8463. As against salvage.]—A vessel which had stranded on rocks & sustained heavy damage got off with the assistance of various salvors & was placed in dock for temporary repairs. In respect of these services various salvage actions & an action by the ship repairers for salvage &/or necessaries were instituted. No defence was put in, but in the first action an appearance was entered & an undertaking given to put in bail for ship, cargo & freight in the sum of £1,000. The cargo & freight were valued at £327. Before the other actions were instituted the cargo had been landed & dispersed. After some temporary repairs had been effected the vessel was sold by the marshal. She only realised £889. The ship repairers, whose claim for salvage was disallowed, claimed that the amount expended by them should be allowed as against the other salvors:—Held: a ship repairers' claim ranks after maritime liens already accrued, & although all the salvors had benefited, there was no principle by which the ship repairers' claim could be preferred to those of the salvors.—THE RUSSLAND, [1924] P. 55; 93 L. The ship, which was not worth the dock dues, was abandoned to the dock authorities on Oct. 24, & the cargo, which had not been released, was, after notice to the owners, sold on Dec. 16:—Held: the abandonment of the ship by the master was not a repudiation by him of his contract to carry the goods to the place of their destination; the owners of cargo by not procuring its release waived their right to have the cargo transhipped; & therefore the owners of the ship were entitled to pro rata freight.

For the enforcement of this charge they also obtained, on notice to mtgees. to whom the vessel had been mtged. by the limited co., a further order for the appointment of a receiver of freight, &, conditionally, for the sale of the vessel. Both orders were subsequently set aside, & the solrs. admitting that the charging order must be postponed to the mtge., appealed as against the limited co.:—Held: (1) the charging order was wrong in form & bad in substance, &, together with the consequential order, must be set aside, for at the most, the property, if any, preserved by the exertions of the solrs. was limited to the interest of those who instructed them to oppose the claims of the master in respect of his lien on the barque, & the vessel had not only ceased to be under the control of the ct., but had changed hands, & become subject to a mtge., before the charging order was applied for; (2) the co. to whom the vessel was transferred could not be fixed with constructive notice of the possible liability of the vendors for the unpaid costs of their solrs., even though the actual vendor & the promoter of the co. were one & the same person.—THE BIRNAM WOOD, [1907] P. 1; 76 L. In questions of bottomry, more especially the ct. is bound to expect particular vigilance; because, although bonds of this kind are to be supported with a high hand, when clear & simple, they are, in many respects, things to be narrowly watched. Bottomry is a transaction which affords great opportunities of collusion; &, therefore, on the very account of the importance given to these bonds, they are to be pursued with exact attention, & with very active diligence, in order that the ct. may have the opportunity of considering them in their recent origin, & with a view

8486. —— —— —— Depends on circumstances of each case.]—In 1878 a collision occurred, in the North Sea, between a Norwegian steamer & a British vessel, in which the latter was sunk. The name & place of business of the Norwegian co. owning the steamer were known to the owners of the British vessel, & for one or more days, on forty-seven occasions during the following eleven years, the Norwegian steamer put into ports in the United Kingdom. During the same period there were changes in the capital & in the shareholders of the Norwegian co.

In 1889 pltfs., the owners of the British vessel, instituted an action in rem against the Norwegian steamer. The owners of the Norwegian steamer, as defts., pleaded, in bar of the action, that the claim of pltfs., their rights, if any, & their maritime lien, if acquired, had been lost by laches, & it would be otherwise inequitable to allow the action to proceed, as there had been changes of interest in the ownership of the steamer, the rights of third parties had intervened, & the greater part of the crew of the steamer were not now available to give evidence:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to prosecute their claim for damages, for in each case the particular circumstances must be looked at to see whether it would be inequitable to entertain the suit, considering the period of time that had elapsed since the collision, the opportunities of arresting the vessel, the loss of witnesses, the loss of evidence, & the change of property, & in this case, though defts. would be entitled to every presumption which could fairly be made in their favour by reason of the absence of any witness, defts. had failed to show that the merits could not be gone into.—THE KONG MAGNUS, [1891] P. 223; 63 L. 8498. Giving of bail.]—Pltfs., the owners of the German vessel J., commenced an action in rem against the Danish vessel C. in an Admlty. Ct. in Holland, in respect of a collision on the high seas, & the C. was arrested in this action. Pltfs.' agent in Holland & the Dutch Ct. allowed the C. to be released on the underwriters of the C. guaranteeing to the parties interested to the amount of 175,000 gulden, for the compensation which C. might eventually have to pay by legal decision in Holland. While these proceedings were pending in Holland, pltfs. began an action in rem in England in respect of the same collision, & the C. was arrested in the English action.

The result of the giving of bail is the release of the ship. What is the meaning of releasing a ship under the circumstances. It appears to me that the meaning of it is that she is released from all rights & claims against her in respect of the collision which is the cause for which her owners have been compelled to give the bail (FRY, L.J.).—THE CHRISTIANSBORG (1885), 10 P. 8499. ——.]—The owners of the British ship R. & the owners of her cargo sued the German steamship R. in the German Consular Ct. at Constantinople for damages for injury to the cargo caused by collision between the two vessels. An order was made therein for the arrest of the R., or for bail, subject to pltfs. giving security for a certain sum. The action was proceeded with, but pltfs. never gave the required security, & consequently the R. was never arrested. The R. left Constantinople during the pendency of the action & came to England, where she was arrested in the present action in rem instituted by the owners of cargo in respect of the same cause of action. Previously to the institution of the present action defts. had given bail in the action at Constantinople to which port the R. was a constant trader, although pltfs. in that action had never given the required security. The limit of defts.' liability in the German Consular Ct. was the value of the R., a sum considerably less than the limit of their liability in this country. Upon motion by defts. to release the R. without giving bail, or to stay the action:—Held: bail having been given without pltfs. having deposited the required security, was given voluntarily & not under compulsion, & pltfs. were not proceeding vexatiously in instituting a second action in this country, & the ship ought not to be released.—THE REINBECK (1889), 60 L. 8503. Lighthouses vested in Trinity House.]—(1) The lighthouses which are exempted from rating by Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 430, are those only the superintendence & management of which is by Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 389, vested in the Trinity House, the Comrs. of Northern Lighthouses, & the Port of Dublin Corpn., & not lighthouses under the control & management of local authorities, such as the Mersey Docks & Harbour Board.

(2) The Mersey Docks & Harbour Board were possessed of a tower used as a lighthouse & also as a telegraph station, in respect of which they received tolls from vessels using their docks or entering the port of Liverpool, which tolls were directed by the statutes under which the board derived their authority to be so fixed, that, with the other receipts of the board applicable to conservancy purposes, they should not be higher than were necessary to meet the conservancy expenditure:—Held: inasmuch as the tower was incapable of profitable occupation, it was not rateable to the relief of the poor.

(3) Two dwelling-houses adjoining the tower were used by the lightkeepers, & if not so used in connection with the lighthouse might be let to tenants at a rent, & the rent would be enhanced by the fact that they had been built in the neighbourhood of the tower:—Held: the rateable value of the dwelling-houses must be ascertained with reference to the fact that they had been built in the neighbourhood of the tower.—MERSEY DOCKS & HARBOUR BOARD v. LLANEILIAN OVERSEERS (1884), 14 Q. There was a proviso, that nothing in the Act should extend to charge any of the King's ships of war with the duties granted by the Act or patent. At the time of passing this Act the post office packets were not ships owned by the Crown:—Held: the exception of His Majesty's ships of war did not, by implication, render the King's other ships chargeable; & post office packets, the property of the Crown, were not subject to toll.—SMITHETT v. BLYTHE (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 509; 9 L. 8514. Entrance to dock—Whether public highway.]—(1) On Mar. 28, 1907, defts.' vessel by negligence damaged the dock gates of a dock. The gates were used on Mar. 29, 30, 31. On Apr. 1, the gates were closed for repairs, & remained closed on Apr. 1, 2, & 3. On Apr. 1, pltfs.' vessel arrived outside the dock, & was prevented from entering the dock to load a cargo then waiting therein. By statute the dock co. were obliged upon payment of certain rates & subject to certain conditions to keep the dock "open to all persons for the shipping & unshipping of goods, & the embarking & landing of passengers." In an action by pltfs. against defts. to recover damages for the detention of the vessel so caused by defts.:—Held: although the dock co. were under a statutory obligation to allow all persons to use the dock upon payment of dock dues, that did not make the entrance to the dock a public highway.

(2) The obligation on the dock co. was similar to that of an innkeeper, who has to receive guests, or a common carrier, who is obliged to carry goods tendered for carriage.

(3) Defts.' negligence was too indirectly related to the alleged interference with pltfs.' rights & their loss to constitute a good cause of action by pltfs. against defts.

8524. —— To provide safe docks & berths.]—Pltfs. were owners of a ship, & defts. the proprietors of docks & a basin connected therewith, with power to charge tolls for their use, & they advertised that the docks were fit for the reception of vessels of 1,000 tons burthen & upwards. The dock was connected with a tidal river by a basin, which was still incomplete & in a state of excavation. A channel of about 540 feet in length had been cut to about the depth of the dock sill of the width of seventy feet from the dock to the entrance to the river, a bank being left on either side. At high water the whole of the basin was covered, & no public notice of its state had been given, nor had the channel been marked by buoys or otherwise. Pltfs.' vessel, a barque of 674 tons, entered the deck unladen, & having taken a cargo of coals she was attempting to come out at high spring tide, when she grounded on one of the banks of the channel; a pilot was in charge, & there was no mismanagement on the part of the crew:—Held: it was the duty of defts. to take reasonable care that their dock & basin were kept so free from obstruction as that those using them might do so without danger to their lives or property; they had under the above circumstances been guilty of a negligent breach of such duty, & were liable in an action brought against them by pltfs. for the loss of their ship.—THOMPSON v. NORTH EASTERN RY. 8525. —— ——.]—(1) Pltfs.' ship was injured & sunk by striking against a sunken wreck in Piel Channel, a channel leading into Barrow harbour. Deft. co. had, under local Acts, power to remove wrecks & obstructions from the channel in question. They were also, by virtue of those Acts, the harbour authority within Removal of Wrecks Act, 1877 (c. 16). Defts. had taken possession of the wreck a few days before pltfs.' vessel struck upon it. & had partially removed it when the accident happened. Pltfs. sued deft. co. for the damages caused by the accident, & it was admitted that, if responsible, they were guilty of negligence. Semble: defts. were not responsible for the damage occasioned under Removal of Wrecks Act, 1877 (c. 16), s. 4, as the language of the sect. is permissive, & could not be read as imposing a duty upon harbour authorities; nor had they rendered themselves responsible by taking possession of the wreck.

(2) By one of the local Acts defts. were empowered to receive a certain proportion of the light dues from ships entering Piel Channel, & those dues were to be applied for maintaining, improving, regulating, & buoying the channel:—Held: this cast upon defts. an obligation to remove the obstruction, & to take the necessary means for warning vessels away from it, upon the principle of Mersey Board v. Gibbs, No. 8665, post, & on this ground pltfs. were entitled to recover.—DORMONT v. FURNESS RY. 8531. —— Suitability of quays for cargo.]—Pltfs. were the owners of ox hides which arrived on board a general ship at the docks at Liverpool belonging to the Mersey Docks & Harbour Board. The cargo was unloaded on to the quay by master porters, whose duty it was to unload ships in the docks & who were licenced for that purpose by the dock board. The hides were damaged when on the quay owing to some powdered barilla ore, which had been unloaded from a ship on to the same quay a few weeks before, having got into the interstices between the stones forming the flooring of the quay. In an action against the dock board & the master porters to recover damages for the injury to the hides the jury found that the board were negligent in allowing the quay to be used for the hides whilst in its then condition, but that the master porters were not negligent. The board contended that they owed no duty in that respect to pltfs., the duty being imposed by the board's Acts & regulations made under those Acts on the master porters alone:—Held: there was nothing in the Acts or regulations which relieved the board from the duty to take reasonable care that the quay was fit to receive the hides, & therefore the board were liable.—LIEBIG'S EXTRACT OF MEAT CO. v. MERSEY DOCKS & HARBOUR BOARD & NELSON (WALTER) & SON, [1918] 2 K. 8534. ——.]—The Witham Outfall Board was by a local Act constituted for the purpose of excavating, forming & maintaining a new cut for the improvement of the river Witham from the port & docks of Boston to the sea so as to enable ships of larger tonnage to proceed to the docks. By another local Act, the Boston Corpn. was given power to construct a new dock on the river Witham, & by s. 9 of that Act it was provided that the corporation, in exercising the powers of the Act, in relation to the construction, maintenance, & use of the dock, the widening & embanking of the river, & other works therein described, should observe & be bound by certain regulations & restrictions contained therein of which (5) was to the effect that any damage or injury done by any steamer or other vessel to the fascine or other works under the jurisdiction of the board should be made good by the corpn. to the reasonable satisfaction of the engineer of the board.

In 1922 a steamer proceeding down the river from the dock at Boston, took ground on the left bank of the river & swung round to the right bank, thereby causing damage & becoming a serious obstruction to navigation. The owners having abandoned her, the corpn. raised her & sold her for a sum much less than the amount of the damage caused. The Witham Board claimed the cost of repairs to their works from the corpn.:—Held: so long as the corpn. exercised the powers given to them as the navigation authority for the harbour & port of Boston, they were bound by the regulations contained in second Act, s. 9, so that under regulation 5 the damage caused by a steamer that had used the dock to the banks of the river fell to be made good by the corpn.—WITHAM OUTFALL BOARD v. BOSTON CORPN. 8535. To provide bridges—Of sufficient capacity to carry traffic—Bridges insufficient to carry increased burden of traffic.]—A dock co. being required by statute to build such good & substantial bridges for carriages, horses, & passengers over their cuts as they should deem necessary, & for ever to keep the same in good repair, built bridges sufficient to carry the traffic of the district as it then existed. Subsequently manufactories were established on a tract of land inclosed by their cuts, in which large boilers & engines of 20 tons weight & upwards were constructed, which the bridges were insufficient to carry:—Held: the statute did not impose upon the co. the duty of providing bridges sufficient to carry such traffic.—R. v. EAST & WEST INDIA DOCK CO. No duty to trespassers.]—By regulation 9 of the First Schedule of the Dockyard Port of Dover Order in Council of June 10, 1912, all vessels other than His Majesty's ships are forbidden to use the eastern entrance to the Admlty Harbour between one hour after sunset & one hour before sunrise, without the special authority of the King's Harbour Master. While using the said entrance during the prohibited hours without the authority of the King's Harbour Master pltf.'s yacht ran upon the wreck of H.M.S. Glatton, which was said to have been unlighted at the time:—Held: pltf. was in effect a trespasser, & even assuming the wreck was at the time of the collision unlighted, deft., the King's Harbour Master, owed no duty to make the harbour safe for people who were using it at hours when they had no right to use it at all.—H.M.S. 8538. Validity—Ultra vires or unreasonable—Restraint of trade—Use of meter.]—Under a local Harbour Act the corpn. of P. had power to make bye-laws regulating their officers in the affairs of the wharf, & for regulating porters, carmen, etc. By a bye-law, if any other than the meters appointed by the corpn. weighed coals, etc., unladen from the wharf, he shall incur a penalty of 40*s.*:—Held: the bye-law was too extensive, inasmuch as it compelled third parties buying & selling to accept the corpn. meter for weighing of goods.—ALDRIDGE v. WHITING (1866), 30 J. P. 309.

8539. —— —— —— Marine store dealing.]—A bye-law under a local harbour Act, which incorporated Harbours & Docks & Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 27), declared that no person shall deal in marine stores in or about the docks without first obtaining permission of the dock co. An engineer of a steamer in dock sold to C. some old iron bars & worn-out fittings within the dock without such permission:—Held: the bye-law was ultra vires & unreasonable, being in restraint of trade.—CHAMBERLAIN v. CONWAY (1888), 53 J. P. 214; 5 T. L. R. 44, D. C.

8540. —— —— Restriction of employment of lumpers.]—By Harbours Docks & Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 27), s. 83, the undertakers authorised by any special Act to construct a dock may from time to time make such bye-laws as they shall think fit for, amongst other purposes, regulating the shipping, unshipping & removing of all goods within the limits of the dock, & for regulating the duties & conduct of all persons, as well the servants of the undertakers as others, employed in the dock. A dock co., who were the undertakers under a special Act, made bye-laws that no lumpers should be allowed to work on board any vessel in the dock, but such as were authorised by the co., unless permission in writing had been previously obtained from the superintendent of the dock, & that servants of the co. only should be allowed to work within the dock premises, whether on ship, lighter or shore:—Held: the bye-laws were in excess of the power conferred upon the dock company by s. 83, & were therefore invalid.—DICK v. BADART (1883), 10 Q. 8542. —— —— Control of use of fire arms.]—A port authority was authorised by its local Act to make bye-laws (inter alia) "for the regulation of prevention of the use of firearms in the Haven . . . & on the piers of the Haven or on the rivers or from the quays or banks thereof over the Haven . . . or rivers or any part thereof." The port authority made a bye-law as follows: "No person shall, while using or while in or upon or about the rivers or the banks or shores thereof or any land of the Comrs., do or cause or incite any other person to do any of the acts specified in the following sub-sects. of this bye-law . . . (d) Use any firearm or airgun; provided always that this sub-sect. shall not affect the rights of riparian owners of land on either side of the rivers":—Held: the bye-law was not ultra vires, & not unreasonable, & therefore applt., who stood in the stern of a boat against the bank of a river within the area governed by the port authority, & fired a double-barrelled sporting gun at a coot crossing the river, was properly convicted of an offence against the bye-law.—SMITH v. GREAT YARMOUTH PORT & HAVEN COMRS. 8543. —— Persons entitled to dispute validity—Trade protection association.]—A dock co. having, under its special Act & Harbours, Docks & Piers Act, 1847 (c. 27), s. 83, power to make regulations & bye-laws, issued a compulsory code of regulations for shipowners using the docks; but these regulations were not confirmed as "bye-laws" in manner prescribed by sect. 85 of the general Act. Certain accommodation provided for by the regulations, such as the appropriation of particular berths at the option of any shipowner upon certain specified terms, were in excess of what was required by statute to be provided by the dock co., & certain rates & charges imposed by them were beyond the co.'s statutory powers. A firm of shipowners which, prior to the issue of the regulations, had been in the habit of using the docks & having particular berths appropriated for their ships, finding that the terms imposed by regulations for such accommodation caused them inconvenience & increased expense, brought an action, by themselves as individuals, against the dock co., for a declaration that the regulations were altogether invalid until confirmed as required by statute, & also an injunction by way of consequential relief; a trade protection assocn. of shipowners, of which the firm & other shipowners were members, but which owned no ships themselves, being made co-pltfs.:—Held: (1) pltf. assocn. had no locus standi, not being themselves shipowners, & not being entitled to sue as agent for their members; (2) pltf. firm, suing as individuals, & not by the A.-G. as representing the public, were bound to prove special damage by the issue of the regulations, & this they had failed to do, inasmuch as any accommodation provided by the dock co. beyond the statutory requirement must be a matter of agreement between the firm & the dock company; (3) under R. S. C. 1883, Ord. 25, r. 5, a declaration was made, notwithstanding the abandonment of the claim for consequential relief, that the regulations, not having been confirmed as bye-laws, as required by

See Harbours, Docks & Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 27), ss. 25, 26, 33, 47.

8546. Right to levy—How arising.]—That a port duty may be created within time of memory, there can be no doubt. The King may grant to a subject the franchise of creating a port, & may confer upon the person who thus dedicates his land to the public, & incurs the obligation of repairing the port, a compensation from those who use the port, in the dues paid in respect of the various commodities imported. It is well established law, that it is unnecessary to show that these payments have been made from time immemorial (PARKE, B.).—JENKINS v. HARVEY (1835), 1 Cr. 8548. —— —— Proof of title.]—(1) Where a party suing for port duties as owner of a port, gave no other evidence of title than the continual payment of a certain duty, which the jury found to be unreasonable in amount:—Held: he could not have a verdict for a less amount found by the jury to be reasonable.

8550. —— Goods imported into Sunderland—Construction of charter.]—A charter of 1687 granted to the corpn. of the master, pilots & seamen of Newcastle upon Tyne primage, described in the charter as an ancient duty, upon goods brought by ship into the Tyne, or any of the creeks of Newcastle, of which Sunderland was one, to be rated & accounted "in manner & form following: that is to say," aliens & strangers born, & all other persons arriving with ships in Newcastle within any of the creeks & not belonging to same, to pay before they departed with their ships; & every free merchant & inhabitant of Newcastle, arriving in the Tyne with a ship, within ten days after landing the goods. The charter also granted to the corpn. all other perquisites, ancient duties & profits which they had theretofore lawfully had & enjoyed; & also provided that the sums granted by the charter should be in lieu of all other duties theretofore received:—Held: (1) the charter was not inconsistent with the claim of primage in respect of goods imported into Sunderland by merchants resident there; (2) evidence of usage was admissible in support of the claim.—BRADLEY v. NEWCASTLE PILOTS (1853), 2 E. & B. 427; 23 L. 8552. —— Goods carried in Upper Mersey.]—By Upper Mersey Dues Act, 1860 (c. cxxv), s. 17, the right to collect "town dues" was transferred from the Mersey Docks & Harbour Board to a separate body of trustees in respect of all goods "carried or conveyed upon, over, or along any part of the Upper Mersey" as therein defined:—Held: Upper Mersey Dues Act, 1860 (c. cxxxv), s. 17, applied to goods carried over any part of the Upper Mersey in the ordinary course of a voyage, not only to goods landed at some port in the Upper Mersey.—MERSEY DOCKS & HARBOUR BOARD v. HUNTER, CRAIG & CO. 8553. —— Quay space used for manipulation of goods—Where agreement for permanent berths at tonnage rates.]—Defts. agreed with pltfs. to appropriate for the use of plt.s.' steamers three permanent quay berths at Tilbury Dock on payment of tonnage rates:—Held: the agreement did not impliedly prevent defts. from charging pltfs. for the use of quay space for the manipulation of goods, nor was there anything in the Dock Co.'s Act of 1882 to prevent it.—ORIENT STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD. v. LONDON & INDIA DOCKS JOINT COMMITTEE (1901), 17 T. 8554. —— Piers purchased under statutory powers — Amount of toll stated in schedule.]—Under two special Acts the G. Pier co. was authorised to make & maintain a pier, & to take certain rates, duties, & tolls prescribed by those Acts. W. Pier was constructed as a private undertaking, & a long lease of the pier became vested in the T. S. co., which made certain charges for the use of the pier. Under the powers given to them by Thames River Steamboat Service Act, 1904 (c. cciii), pltfs. purchased from the G. Pier co. the pier & the undertaking of the co. & the right to levy tolls, rates, & duties, & all other rights, privileges, authorities, & powers vested in or exercisable by the co., & all other the property, estates, rights, & privileges of the co., & also purchased the lease of the W. Pier from the T. S. co. By Thames River Steamboat Service Act, 1904 (c. cciii), s. 15, pltfs. were authorised to "charge & levy in respect of vessels calling at the piers & landing places a toll not exceeding the amount stated in the schedule":—Held: pltfs. had no power to charge any tolls in respect of either pier except those authorised by Thames River Steamboat Service Act, 1904 (c. cciii), s. 15; & they were not entitled to charge in respect of G. Pier the tolls prescribed by the special Act of the G. Pier co., or in respect of W. Pier the same charges as the T. S. co. might have charged.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION CO. (1907), 97 L. T. 863, C. A.

8555. Public notice of rates authorised—Rates in force for time being—Not maximum allowed by statute.]—A pier co. were authorised by Act of Parliament to charge, for goods laden or unladen on the pier, the rates specified in a schedule to the Act, but they could only demand them so long as "the rates for the time being authorised to be taken as thereinbefore mentioned" were painted on a board affixed to the premises. By a subsequent sect. power was given to lower the tolls or to raise them to such sums as the company should think proper, not exceeding the sums authorised by the Act. The co. lowered some of the rates, but put up a board showing the tolls contained in the schedule to the Act:—Held: the Act required the actual tolls in force for the time being, & not the maximum tolls authorised by the Act, to be painted on the board.—GREGSON v. POTTER (1879), 4 Ex. D. 142; 48 L. J. M. C. 86; 27 W. R. 840.

8556. Variation of amount—Authority to vary—Presumption of legality.]—PHILLIPS v. WILLIAMS (1903), 19 T. L. R. 233, C. A.

8557. —— Who entitled to vary.] — Under sects. 78 & 79 of a local Act, the harbour co. are entitled to levy quay dues on goods landed in the harbour, which are not specified in a schedule to the Act, at the rate of 1*s.* per ton, or at the option of the co. to fix quay dues at a sum not exceeding one-tenth part of the freight so that such rate does not exceed 1*s.* per ton. Under sect. 83 of the Act the co. only, & not the lessee of the rates, can raise & reduce the rates.—MILLMAN v. RENWICK, WILTON & CO., LTD. (1905), 22 T. L. R. 168.

8558. —— According to ownership of goods—Prize cargoes.]—By the Bristol Docks Acts the Bristol Corpn. acquired certain docks & were empowered to charge reasonable warehouse rates & rents, Bristol Docks Act, 1881 (c. clxxvii), s. 8, providing that all rates on same description of articles should be charged without partiality & without regard to the person to whom they belonged. The Acts incorporated the Harbours, Docks, & Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 27), which by sect. 30 makes it illegal for the corpn. to differentiate their warehouse rates & rents as between various owners or persons interested in cargoes:—Held: each of the above provisions precluded the corpn. from charging higher warehouse rates & rents in the case of prize grain cargoes taken into store under the order of the Board of Trade or the Admlty. Marshal than in respect of same description of goods belonging to other persons.—THE CLARISSA RADCLIFFE (1914), 31 T. L. R. 98.

8559. —— According to destination—True destination.]—Pltfs.' steamer was chartered to take a cargo of coal to Alexandria, & she loaded the order under this sect. it was provided that any boat or vessel used by any one but the licensed ferrymen in ferrying passengers or landing or taking off the same from the wharf should pay 1*s.* for each passenger landed or taken off; also 2*s.* 6*d.* for each time such boat or vessel should touch at or land passengers on the wharf, to be paid by the persons owning or working such boat or vessel. A boat of deft.'s used in ferrying without hire, on May 16, touched several times at the wharf & sixty passengers embarked in the boat from the wharf:—Held: the Act is one abridging a public right & must be strictly construed & it did not give power to impose such rates.—BOURKE v. MURPHY (1856), 1 P. E. I. 126.—CAN.

n. —— Top wharfage.]—Pltf. & defts., owners of lots which extended side by side from St. John street to low water mark, in the harbour of St. John, by deed made a common passage-way twelve feet wide along the length of each lot, on which each was bound to build & keep in repair a wharf, & each conveying to the other the right of way over the wharf, pltf.'s right of wharfage on the north side of the street being reserved. Afterwards pltf. obtained from the corpn. of St. John the right to erect a wharf beyond low water mark, extending from the end of said passage-way for the public use, in the cargo in defts.' dock. Pltfs. intended that after discharge at Alexandria she should proceed in ballast to Calcutta. When she entered defts.' dock the master described her as bound for Calcutta via Alexandria, but the clearance request stated that she was bound for Alexandria, though this was afterwards altered to "Calcutta via Alexandria." The dock rate chargeable by defts. for vessels "departing for" Alexandria was less than for vessels "departing for" ports outside Europe:—Held: Alexandria was the destination of the vessel when she left the dock, & pltfs. were therefore liable to pay the lower rate only.—BARRY RY. 8561. "Owner" of goods—Who included in "owner"—Gratuitous bailee—Right to tolls derived from charter.]—A charter of James II. granted to the master pilots & seamen of Newcastle-upon-Tyne certain dues, to be paid "by all persons being owners of any goods which should be brought in any ship from beyond the seas into the river Tyne," in manner following "that is to say, aliens & strangers born, & other such persons who, with their ships, should arrive within the said port, & not belong to the same, before they depart with their said ships from the said port, should pay the duties aforesaid, & every free merchant & other inhabitant of Newcastle, arriving with their said ships within the river Tyne, should pay the duties aforesaid within ten days after the landing of the goods as aforesaid, upon lawful demand." The duties had always been paid by the importer:—Held: a person who gratuitously landed, entered, & warehoused goods for the owners, who resided in London, was an "owner" within the meaning of the charter, & liable to the dues.—NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE MASTER PILOTS & SEAMEN v. HAMMOND (1849), 4 Exch. 285; 18 L. Alleged misapplication of toll by harbour authority—"General toll."]—A harbour authority were given by their special Act power to levy a toll on every vessel lying within the limits of their harbour for more than one tide. They were also empowered by the same Act to raise a sum of £2,500 to be spent on buoys, beacons, lights, & moorings, & a similar sum on other harbour works; they had in fact borrowed & spent £5,000, but all except £370 of this sum had been spent on works of the second class. They had, however, spent a substantial sum out of revenue on buoys, lights, etc. In an action to recover tolls in respect of certain sailing barges:—Held: the toll was a general toll, payable by every vessel sheltering in the harbour as above, & the fact of the whole £2,500 not having been applied to buoys, lights, etc., afforded no defence to the action.—QUEENBOROUGH CORPN. v. SMEED, DEAN & CO., LTD. 8584. Duty on tonnage or on each package.]—A harbour Act authorised certain Harbour Comrs. to charge a sum not "exceeding 1*d.* for every ton or less quantity than a ton, & for every package & parcel of goods, wares, merchandise, etc., exported or imported over the bars of certain rivers." Tin plates were exported, packed in wooden boxes for shipment, & such boxes formed part of & composed one entire quantity or shipment in one vessel, under one bill of lading, & to the same consignee, & at an uniform rate of freight on all the tin plates so shipped, such freight being paid on the quantity of tons weight:—Held: that the Comrs. were entitled to charge 1*d.* per package, & were not bound to charge 1*d.* per ton weight.—JONES v. PHILLIPS (1851), 7 Exch. 85; 21 L. J. Ex. 6; 16 J. P. 394; 155 E. R. 866.

8585. Goods imported—What amounts to importation.]—By 48 Geo. 3, c. civ, it was recited that the harbour of Berwick upon Tweed had gone to decay for want of funds, & that it was expedient that the duties on goods should be fixed, & vested in Comrs., to be by them applied for the purposes of the Act: & Comrs. were appointed for carrying the Act into execution, & empowered to rebuild the pier of the harbour, to deepen the harbour, to remove obstacles, to set up, within the harbour, jetties, posts, etc., for carrying on the navigation & rendering the harbour more commodious, & for other works & conveniences as they should think fit; & to make & repair quays, wharfs & docks, for the better accommodation of shipping. Duties, to be paid to the Comrs., were imposed, according to a schedule, on goods "imported into or exported from the said harbour." It was enacted that the harbour should be deemed to extend down the Tweed & its shores, from the bridge over the Tweed to the sea. A vessel brought goods from sea into the harbour, made some use of the posts erected therein by the Comrs., & passed, without otherwise using the harbour, under the bridge, up the river, & landed the goods at a point above the bridge, within the flow of the tide, where there was no harbour:—Held: the goods were not imported into the harbour, and therefore not liable to duty. Although the schedule of duties spoke of "goods imported & shifted to another vessel for exportation, & not landed."—WILSON v. ROBERTSON (1855), 4 E. & B. 923; 24 L. J. Q. B. 185; 1 Jur. N. S. 755; 119 E. R. 343.

8586. Goods landed—Goods left on shore until shipped for exportation.]—Defts. were empowered by a local Act to levy tolls on all goods landed within their harbour. In pursuance of a practice which had continued for many years, stones brought along the coast into the harbour were shot from pltf.'s boats on to the shore, below high water mark, & remained on the spot where they were deposited till they were shipped for exportation from the harbour:—Held: the stones were not landed within the meaning of the Act.—HARVEY v. LYME REGIS CORPN. (1869), L. R. 4 Exch. 260; 38 L. J. Ex. 141; 21 L. T. 227; 17 W. R. 892; 3 Mar. L. C. 287.

8587. Timber—Shipped or unshipped—Towing timber to store ponds.]—Where a statute gave trustees appointed for the improvement of a navigable river & harbour power to charge dues on all timber "shipped or unshipped within the harbour or river":—Held: to attach a tow rope to a log of timber or a number of logs loosely connected at one of the ends for the purpose of towing them is not to "ship" those logs, & to cast off the tow rope is not to "unship" them.—CLYDE NAVIGATION TRUSTEES v. LAIRD (1883), 8 App. Cas. 658, H. 8588. —— Weighing impracticable—Adoption of "rule of thumb" calculation—Application to particular species of wood.]—Under the shipping & docking rates fixed by the Port of London Authority under their statutory powers given by Port of London Act, 1908 (c. 68), "vessels with part cargoes of wood & carrying no other cargo" are charged "3*d.* per ton on the net register & on the deck cargo space, if any, occupied, & 10*d.* per ton on the weight of the wood discharged," plus an authorised additional war charge of 150 per cent. To ascertain the weight of the wood discharged, it being impracticable to weigh it, the Port Authority adopted a "rule of thumb" calculation on a space basis—namely, that a standard of 165 cubic feet of sawn deals weighs 2½ tons.

Defts.' consignment of soft round wood, together with other consignments of timber, was discharged from pltfs.' ship in the Surrey Commercial Docks. Under the terms of the charterparty incorporated in the bill of lading, "if discharged in a dock in London the consignees to pay two-thirds of the dock dues." Pltfs., having paid the Port Authority £77 4*s.* 7*d.* the sum demanded by them in respect of dock dues, claimed from defts. £24 3*s.* 10*d.* as the proportion of that amount attributable to their consignment. Round wood admittedly weighs less than sawn wood, & defts. contended that their proper proportion of dues, worked out on a weight basis & not on the space basis adopted by the Port Authority, was not more than £20 6*s.* which they paid into ct.:—Held: the Port Authority had no power to levy dues on a formula which, applied to round wood, was manifestly erroneous; each consignee was only liable to the shipowners for his exact proportion of two-thirds of the dues calculated, as regards the 10*d.* rate, on a weight basis; & that accordingly the amount paid into ct. was sufficient.—THE HAMLET, [1924] P. 224; 94 L. 8589. " Grain brought in for sale "—Construction of local Act.]—The Metage on Grain (Port of London) Act, 1872 (c. c.), s. 4, which entitles the corpn. of London to a duty " in respect of all grain brought into the port of London for sale," applies only to grain brought in for sale as grain, & not to grain brought in to be ground into meal, or manufactured into other articles of commerce, & then sold.—COTTON v. VOGAN & Co., [1896] A. 8590. Goods for transhipment only—" Shipped again as soon as practicable."]—Pltfs. received in the Port of London from beyond the seas a large quantity of oil in bulk by their ocean tank steamer Narragansett. When that steamer was reported at the custom house pltfs. intended to tranship to various ports in the United Kingdom specific quantities of the oil she brought, & they accordingly delivered to defts. inwards port rates exemption certificates under s. 9 of the Port of London (Port Rates on Goods) Provisional Order Act, 1910, showing the quantity in tons they intended to tranship to each port. The oil from the Narragansett was discharged into pltfs.' tanks at Purfleet, some of which were empty at the time, & some contained oil intended for distribution in the London district & also oil discharged from previous steamers. From these tanks pltfs. subsequently loaded the various quantities of oil mentioned in the inwards port rates exemption certificates, & conveyed them by small tank steamers to the ports mentioned in those certificates. Pltfs. then delivered to defts. outwards port rates exemption certificates for the oil so transhipped, & claimed exemption from the payment of port rates in respect thereof. Defts. refused to admit pltfs.' claim for exemption on the ground (inter alia), that as the oil brought by the Narragansett had been mixed in the tanks with other oil not intended for transhipment, the identity of the oil transhipped with that imported could not be certified & proved so as to comply with s. 9 of the Port of London (Poor Rates on Goods) Provisional Order Act, 1910 :—Held : (1) the oil transhipped had been sufficiently identified with that certified for transhipment, & therefore pltfs. were entitled to the exemption claimed ; (2) the expression " shipped again as soon as practicable " in s. 9 means shipped again in the ordinary course of navigation & having regard to the facilities of the port, & does not mean shipped again as soon as practicable having regard to the convenience of the merchant's business.—ANGLO-AMERICAN OIL CO., LTD. v. PORT OF LONDON AUTHORITY, [1914] 1 K. 8591. ——.]—Goods belonging to pltfs. were imported by steamer into the Port of London from beyond the seas, & pltfs. delivered to the collector of the Port Authority a certificate under Port of London Poor Rate on Goods Provisional Order, s. 9, stating that the goods were intended for transhipment to the port of Rochester on the river Medway, by sailing craft. Rochester was within the Reculvers line but not within the Port of London. The Port Authority declined to accept the certificate, & pltfs. paid the port rates on the goods under protest. The goods were put over the side from the steamer into a sailing barge & conveyed to Rochester :—Held : these goods were goods imported for transhipment only within the meaning of s. 9 of the Provisional Order & were therefore within the exemption.—PORT OF LONDON AUTHORITY v. BRITISH OIL & CAKE MILLS, LTD., [1915] A. 8592. " Voyage out & home "—Effect of intermediate loading & unloading.]—Under a clause in an Act of Parliament exempting ships from the payment of the same port or toll duties " more than once for the same voyage bout out & home, notwithstanding such ship or vessel might go out & return with a loading of goods of merchandises " : —Held : a vessel having cleared out of port at Hull, with a cargo of goods for Mogadore, on the coast of Africa, which she discharged, & there took in another cargo for London, discharged the same at London, & took in cargo for Hull, with which she arrived at Hull, made two distinct voyages, & not within the exemption.—KINGSTON-UPON-HULL DOCK CO. v. HUNTINGTON (1790), 2 Chit. 597.

8593. —— ——.]—Under the Liverpool Dock Acts of 8 Ann. & 2 Geo. 3, tonnage duties are payable to the dock co. on all vessels sailing with cargoes outwards or inwards, which rate varies according to the several descriptions of voyages in the Acts, one of which is to & from America generally ; so as no ship shall be liable to pay more than once for the same voyage out & home : —Held : a voyage out from Liverpool with a cargo to Halifax in North America, where the ship delivered it, & took in another cargo there for Demarara in South America, & after delivering that, returned to Liverpool with a cargo from Demarara, was all the same voyage out & home within the meaning of the Acts, & chargeable only with one tonnage rate for the use of the docks.—GILDART v. GLADSTONE (1810), 12 East, 439 ; 104 E. The co., finding it necessary to mtge. the harbour, tolls, etc., did so under authority of their charter, & the mtgee. foreclosed the security, entered into possession, & leased to pltf., who sued deft., owner of a wharf within the statutable limits of the harbour, for toll on goods shipped or landed on such wharf:—Held: pltf. could sue only in the corporate name; & a nonsuit was therefore directed.—WHITESIDE v. BELLCHAMBER (1872), 22 C. By an agreement between him & a railway co., he agreed to complete his pier at a considerably earlier time than he was bound to do by the Act, & the co. agreed to complete a branch railway to the pier by the same time; but the agreement contained no stipulations as to opening the pier or railway, or as to the terms on which the pier was to be used. The owner of the pier completed it accordingly, but refused to permit the railway co. to use it, except upon terms to which the co. declined to accede. The ct. refused to grant on motion an injunction restraining the owner of the pier from obstructing the use of it by the co. at the statutory tolls.—FURNESS RY. 8605. Rates revised under invalid regulations—Action to recover excess—Whether maintainable.]—By defts.' Acts of Parliament, all vessels entering into or leaving their docks are liable, according to the tonnage burden thereof, & are compelled to pay certain fixed dues to defts. By Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 26, whenever the tonnage of any ship has been ascertained & registered in accordance with the provisions of that Act, same shall thenceforth be deemed to be the tonnage of such ship, & be repeated in every subsequent registry thereof, unless any alteration is made in the form or capacity of such ship, or unless it is discovered that the tonnage of such ship has been erroneously computed; & in either of such cases such ship shall be remeasured, & the tonnage determined & registered according to the rules in that Act contained. By sect. 27 remeasurement may be made upon desire of the shipowner. By sect. 29, the Comrs. of Customs are empowered to make certain modifications & alterations in the tonnage rules prescribed by the Act. Under that sect. the Comrs. of Customs in 1860 made regulations, which had the effect of increasing the registered tonnage of pltf.'s ships. In 1865 these regulations were, by the Exch. Chamber, declared to be contrary to the Act of Parliament, & invalid. This action was brought to recover the excess of rates paid in accordance with these invalid regulations, over the amount which would have been due under Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c. 104):—Held: the action could not be maintained.—MOSS v. MERSEY DOCKS & HARBOUR BOARD (1872), 26 L. 8610. —— —— Private railway.]—By a special Act of 1840 trustees were appointed for the management of a certain harbour.

Sect. 53 of the Act authorised the lord of the manor, or the owner of land situate within or adjoining to the harbour, amongst other things, to lay down railways over the quays, roads, & works, but so as all such railways should be constructed of such height & in such form as should not in any manner impede or interrupt the general for the admission into their harbour of certain property of pltf. for a fixed sum, less than the toll which they might have claimed under their charter, but they afterwards refused to allow the property to be removed without the payment of their usual harbour dues:—Held: pltf. might recover back the overplus.—MARSH v. PORT HOPE HARBOUR CO. public traffic of the port, or the free passage to & from the same; & railways so to be erected or made were, subject to the aforesaid restriction, to be wholly excluded from the jurisdiction of the trustees, & be the private property & for the sole & exclusive use of the person or persons upon whose land the same should stand or be placed, & his or their assigns. The lord of the manor was the owner of lands adjoining the south side quay of the harbour.

Tenants of the lord of the manor having proceeded to lay down two lines of railway from their works along the south side quay, an action was brought by the trustees of the harbour to restrain them from constructing such railway, on the ground that they would impede the general public traffic of the port:—Held: the main object of the Act was to benefit the persons frequenting the harbour; & any railway laid on the south side of the quay must be constructed in such a way as not by its construction, or its natural & necessary user, in any manner to impede the fair public traffic of the port.—LOWTHER v. CURWEN (1887), 58 L. 8611. —— —— Boundary fence.]—A local Act forbade the making of any "building or erection" on any wharf in a certain haven or within ten feet of the head of the wharf:—Held: a boundary fence erected along the side of the wharf was not a "building or erection" within the meaning of the Act.—A.-G. & GREAT YARMOUTH PORT & HAVEN COMRS. v. HARRISON (1920), 89 L. J. Ch. 607; 85 J. P. 54; 18 L. G. R. 740, C. A.

8612. —— Outside harbour—Mooring vessel—Sufficiency of notice to remove obstruction.]—By West India Docks Act, 1831 (c. lii), s. 101, a penalty is imposed on every master or person in charge of any ship, lighter, etc., who places or suffers it to remain in the river Thames within 200 yards of any of the dock entrances, unless for the purpose of coming into or going out of the docks; & every master, etc., of any ship, barge, etc., so placed within such distance who does not immediately remove it from within such distance "on being thereunto required by the dockmaster or dockmasters" is made liable to a fine for every hour that "such obstruction shall remain after such requisition made."

Notices requiring the removal of vessels from within the prohibited distance were signed beforehand in blank by the dockmaster, &, upon a vessel mooring within that distance, the date & the name of the vessel were filled up by the lockman, who, if the person in charge refused to move, served him with the notice without consulting the dockmaster as to the removal of that particular vessel:—Held: (1) the notice, although only signed in blank by the dockmaster & filled in by his subordinate, was a good requisition by the dockmaster; (2) in order to constitute an offence under the sect. there need not be an actual or imminent obstruction to any particular ship or to the traffic generally, a vessel moored within the prohibited distance constituting, if not removed upon notice, an obstruction within the meaning of the sect.—DUCKHAM v. GIBBS, [1900] 1 Q. 8614. Emptying refuse—What amounts to refuse—Mersey Docks.]—By sect. 85 of the Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Act, 1858 (c. xcii) it is an offence for any person to throw or empty any ballast, rubbish, dust, ashes, shingle, stones, or other refuse or things into any dock, or to do any other act to prejudice any of the works of the Mersey Dock Board.

An information was laid by resp. against applt. under the above sect. on the ground that applt., the master of a steamship which was berthed in a dock at B., had pumped from the engine room bilges into the dock water mixed with common petroleum. The justices who heard the information convicted applt.:—Held: the justices were right in holding that the word "refuse," as used in sect. 85 of the Act, was not confined to solid matter of a character similar to those things specifically mentioned in the sect., but included matter of any kind, solid, or liquid, which might be prejudicial to the works of the docks.—GRAY v. HEATHCOTE (1918), 88 L. q. Anchor of dredge placed in public harbour—Duty to place buoy to mark it.]—By the first count of the declaration, it was alleged that the master of a Govt. dredge placed the anchor of the dredge in the main channel of a public harbour, with the fluke of the anchor sticking up, & so left it for an unreasonable length of time without placing any proper buoy or signal to mark the place of the anchor, & without taking any proper means to guard against accidents to vessels navigating the harbour, & that pltf.'s mariners having occasion to pass out of the said harbour with pltf.'s vessel, without any default on their part, ran upon the anchor & injured the vessel:—Held: the count described a good cause of action, that the master of the dredge should have placed a buoy to the anchor to warn vessels navigating the harbour.—LUNT v. LLOYD (1881), 21 N. 8617. —— Claim as of right—As member of public.]—The right of the public to the use of the waters of a navigable harbour is limited to user for the purposes of navigation & fishery & matters incidental thereto, & any right of navigation claimed over such waters must be a right incidental to the navigation of the person claiming it, & not a right incidental to the navigation of others.

A claim by colliery owners of a right as members of the public to moor in a public harbour a coal hulk for the purpose of supplying coals therefrom to merchant vessels entering the harbour is a claim of a right not incidental to navigation & is bad in law.—DENABY & CADEBY MAIN COLLIERIES, LTD. v. ANSON, [1911] 1 K. 8619. Duty of vessels to obey order of harbour master.]—By the regulations relating to Falmouth harbour, "masters & persons in charge of vessels are to cast off & remove them whenever required, & in the event of neglect or refusal to do so, they will be removed by the dockmaster. Vessels are to strike their yards & masts, if required." The master of a vessel which had been moored at the eastern pier was desired by the dockmaster to remove her to the western pier, & to strike his top gallant masts, etc. On the master's refusal to obey the order, he having left the vessel with only three persons on board, the dockmaster removed her to the western pier, where during a gale she broke from her moorings & did considerable damage to the wharf:—Held: (1) by the regulations the dockmaster had a discretion to exercise for the welfare of all ships entering the harbour, & the master was bound to obey the order & assist in the removal of his ship, even though if the interests of the ship alone were to be considered, such removal were injudicious; (2) as a matter of fact, the damage was caused by the negligence of the master, & his refusal to obey the orders of the dockmaster; &, consequently, the vessel was liable for such damage.—THE EXCELSIOR (1868), L. 8620. ——.]—The T., a screw steamer, was approaching a lock leading from a basin into a dock at the time when two paddle tugs were coming out. The first tug passed out safely. The master of the second thought that there was not room to pass between the T. & the lock wall, & stopped. The harbour master, whose orders he was bound to obey, ordered him to go ahead, & at the same time ordered the T. to go astern. The T. reversed her engines, but only sufficiently to keep her stationary, as the wind & tide were drifting her towards the lock. A collision took place between the port sponson of the tug & the port bow of the T.:—Held: the tug was not to blame, because (a) an incoming ship should give way to an outgoing ship; (b) the master of the tug was bound to obey the order of the harbour master to go ahead; (c) the T. had disobeyed the order to go astern.—TAYLOR v. BURGER (1898), 78 L. The collision would probably not have occurred but for another schooner which had been lying outside the Edith Wier, & which, just previous to the collision, had broken ground & thus narrowed the channel down which the steamer had to pass:—Held: nevertheless that as the Edith Wier's position was contrary to the harbour regulations, she should be liable for all damages to the *M. the dock board for negligence in ordering the vessel to proceed out into the river when the dock officials knew or ought to have known that it was not safe for her to do so:—Held: the action against the dock board failed, for, though under Mersey Dock Act, 1858, s. 49, a dock master may order a ship to leave the premises of the dock board, he had not exercised that power.—THE SUNLIGHT, [1904] P. 100; 73 L. 8626. Validity of directions.]—The clerk to the Fowey Harbour Comrs. served formal directions of the harbour master on pltfs., who were the owners of a number of vessels in respect of which pilotage was not compulsory; & the masters of several of these vessels, on arrival in the harbour, were served by the harbour master with copies of these directions, which provided that between sunrise & sunset the vessels should not proceed up the harbour at a pace exceeding three miles per hour; that between sunset & sunrise they should anchor in a certain defined position; that they should not at any time proceed above a place in the harbour known as Prime Cellars without the sanction of the harbour master; & that they should not at any time be moved within the limits without previously notifying the harbour master; unless in any of the four cases they had a qualified pilot on board.

Pltfs. claimed a declaration that the directions were invalid & unenforceable:—Held: although there might be circumstances under which a harbour master could give directions under Harbours, Docks & Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 27), s. 52, operative for more than the specific occasion, the directions in question constituted an indirect attempt to render pilotage compulsory, &, taken as a whole, were in the nature of general directions which could only be made by bye-law under sect. 83, & subject to confirmation in the manner prescribed for bye-laws; & accordingly they were invalid & unenforceable.—HUGHES (RICHARD) & CO. v. FOWEY HARBOUR COMRS., THE GUELDER ROSE, [1927] P. 1; 96 L. 8629. —— Damage through grounding—Misrepresentation by captain as to type of ship.]—In an action against a harbour master for loss of the cargo of a foreign merchant vessel, caused by injury to the vessel through her "heeling over" upon "taking the ground" in the harbour, it being admitted that the master brought her in in order to "take the ground;" & that, being sharply built, she could not safely do so, unless there was mud of a sufficient depth & strength to support her, & the case for pltf. being, that at a certain spot there was such mud, but that the vessel took the ground before she could get there, owing to there not being sufficient depth of water for a vessel of her draught:—Held: the question of negligence on the part of deft. would depend upon the knowledge or information he had of the build & draught of the vessel, &, in the absence of knowledge on his part, it was the duty of the captain to inform him, &, as it was materially misrepresented to him by the captain, he was not responsible for the result.—LLOYD v. IRON (1865), 4 F. & F. 1011.

8630. —— Change of berth—Action of harbour master not proximate cause of damage.]—After loading a cargo at a crane berth in Ayr Harbour on a Dec. evening, the master of a steamship, influenced by a falling barometer & an increasing gale from the East South East, with rain, resolved to remain in harbour all night. As the loading berth was required by another vessel, the harbour master ordered him to remove, & supplied him with a berth in the dock basin, which was safe except from a storm from the West or North West. According to the experience of the past there was a probability that under the existing conditions of the weather the wind would veer to the West. During the night it did so veer & blew a gale of extraordinary severity, which resulted in damage to the steamship, & to most of the other vessels in the harbour.

In an action of damages by the owners of the steamship against the harbour trustees, on the ground that the harbour master had wrongfully directed the removal of the vessel to a berth which was known to be unsafe:—Held: the damage was due to the extraordinary violence of the storm, & not to any fault on the part of the harbour master in fixing the berth, & the defenders were not liable.—NIVEN v. AYR HARBOUR TRUSTEES (1897), 25 R. See Harbours, Docks & Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 27), ss. 82, 83.

8635. Duty of lessee of wharf—To employ meter of harbour authority.]—The Mayor & Corpn. of Portsmouth were, under an Act of Parliament passed in 1839, entitled to the right to take certain dues in respect of vessels lading or unlading upon or from the wharves of the harbour; a subsequent Act passed in 1868, giving the corpn. additional powers, & conferring upon them the exclusive appointment & regulation of meters & weighers within the harbour, & incorporating Harbours, Docks & Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 27), ss. 81, 82. The corpn. thereupon made certain bye-laws for the appointment, government, & payment of meters. In 1807 the corpn. granted a lease to B., through whom resp. claimed, for nine hundred & ninety-nine years of certain premises, in which there was a proviso that all such goods, wares, & merchandise as shall be proved to be bonâ fide, the sole property of B., his exors., administrators, or assigns, who shall be legally & beneficially entitled to the premises when such goods, etc., shall be landed, shipped, or unshipped, brought to, carried, or laden to upon, or from certain premises in the harbour mentioned shall be freed & discharged from all wharfage, cranage, petit customs, & other duties usually paid at any time or times heretofore, or which at any times hereafter during the respective terms shall become due or payable to the mayor, aldermen, or burgesses. Resp. unloaded a cargo of coals at the premises in the harbour in question, for his own use, & did not employ a corpn. meter: —Held: he was under no legal obligation to employ such meter.—WHITING v. CARPENTER (1871), 24 L. T. 576; 35 J. P. 597.

8636. Metage performed aboard or on shore—Liability for expenses.]—By charterparty it was agreed that a ship should load a cargo of oats, & proceed to a safe port on the East coast of Great Britain, etc., & there "deliver same always afloat on being paid freight," at certain rates per quarter of oats discharged. "The cargo to be brought to & taken from alongside at charterer's expense & risk." The ship sailed to Rochester, & discharged her cargo within that port. The mayor & corpn. of the city of Rochester, as owners of the port, are entitled to an ancient fee, toll, due, or reward of 1*d.* per quarter upon corn brought by water to, & unloaded within, the port, payable by the person bringing such corn, for the weighing of the corn, or being ready & willing to weigh same. This due having been paid by the captain, the shipowners' agent brought an action in the county ct. to recover the amount from the consignees of the cargo as & for money paid for them at their request. Judgment was given for pltf. On appeal, the ct. being of opinion that the question of liability arising between the shipowners & consignees depended upon whether the due was in ancient times a payment for actual metage service done by the mayor & corpn. before a cargo was put over the side of a ship, or afterwards, remitted the case to the judge below in order that he might ascertain the fact:—Held: having regard to the terms of the charterparty, if the due in its origin was for metage to be performed on board, the shipowners must bear it; but, if the metage was to be done ashore, then the charge should fall on the consignees, who would in that case be liable to repay to the shipowners the amount disbursed for same.—WOODHAM v. PETERSON (1871), 25 L. T. 26; 1 Asp. M. L. C. 93.

Exclusive right of harbour authority to provide weighing machines.]—Harbours, Docks & Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 27), ss. 81, 82, which upon certain conditions give the undertakers the exclusive right of weighing & measuring goods loaded or discharged in their docks, do not give them the exclusive right of providing the weighing machines.—PORT OF LONDON AUTHORITY v. CAIRN LINE OF STEAMSHIPS, LTD., [1913] 1 K. 8638. Liability of master porter — Injury to goods.]—By Mersey Dock Acts the cargo of any ship from a foreign or colonial port using certain ports must be received, weighed & loaded off by one set of porters under the direction of a master porter:—Held: these Acts relate to the possibility of injury in the receiving, weighing & loading off the goods, & do not alter the legal liability prior to their delivery to the master porter.—THE consequences, even although the Act of Parliament, giving the harbour-master absolute authority, does not contain a special clause removing the common law liability, if it appear upon the evidence that he implicitly obeyed the directions given to him; but if after taking the position so assigned to him by the harbour-master, he shall be guilty of any wilful neglect, & a collision ensues, he will then be held answerable in damages at the suit of the owner of the injured vessel.—THE INSUPERABLE (1853), 5 Ir. 8632 v. —— ——.]—While a vessel was leaving her berth in a harbour, to which she had gone at the request of the harbour-master, her propeller, which was working, became entangled in a wire cable stretched between the pier & an anchor lying in the harbour. The wire cable was completely submerged, & was at a depth which made it a source of danger to any vessel using her propeller. The captain of the vessel did not know, & could not reasonably have been expected to know, of the existence of the cable, the only indication of its presence being a manilla rope attaching the shore end of the cable to the pier:—Held: the harbour-master was negligent in failing to warn the captain of the presence of the cable, & the owners of the harbour were liable for the damage sustained by the vessel.—ROBERTSON v. PORTPATRICK & WIGTOWNSHIRE JOINT COMMITTEE, [1919] S. 8644. —— ——.]—Pltfs., the harbour authority of Workington, sued defts., the owners of a steamship, for damage to their jetty situate at the junction of, & between, the river Derwent & the harbour. The defence in substance was that pltfs. invited defts.' vessel, which was in charge of a compulsory pilot, to enter the harbour at a time when there was one foot less water than shown by the tide table, so that, when approaching the entrance, with only two feet of water under her, the head of the vessel was canted to port towards the jetty by a freshet, on her port quarter, of two knots running down the river, whilst a strong breeze was acting on her starboard side, with the result that, though the pilot ordered the engines to be put full speed astern & the order was obeyed, with hand reversing gear, in twenty-two seconds, the way was not taken off in time to prevent the stem of the vessel striking the jetty:—Held: defts. were not liable, as they had discharged the onus of proof by rebutting the primâ facie case of negligence against them, for the damage complained of arose from a combination of circumstances consisting of less water than usual, a strong breeze, & a freshet, which together amounted to force majeure.—THE BOUCAU, [1909] P. 163; 78 L. 8648. —— —— Vessel got off shore after grounding in bad weather.]—Owing to negligent navigation defts.' vessel went ashore in bad weather in a position about half a mile from pltfs.' pier. It was held at the trial that the master could & ought to have been aware of the position of the pier. Subsequently she was got off, but she drove against the pier, doing damage, & finally went ashore again in the vicinity of the pier, where she was abandoned by her master & crew, & subsequently broke up. Pieces of the wreckage drifted against the pier doing further damage:—Held: (1) the damage caused on the first contact was a consequence of the failure of the master to take reasonable care to prevent his vessel from doing injury to the pier; (2) defts. were also liable for the damage done on the second occasion, since the weather conditions prevailing after the second grounding were not abnormal, but were such as were likely to be encountered in the locality.—THE ST. A steamship belonging to defts. arrived in the dock, & during the night, when her engines were being worked for keeping the electric light going & other purposes, the waste water from the condensers poured into the barge & damaged pltfs.' goods. When defts.' steamship had taken up her berth for the night no barges were alongside, but during the night the barge in question, which by direction of the port authority had been fastened to a liner, was set adrift by the liner's departure & drifted down to defts.' steamship. In an action for negligence:—Held: in the circumstances defts. ought to have anticipated that barges would be in proximity to their steamship during the night, & therefore were under a duty to take precautions, & pltfs. were entitled to recover.—BERG & SON v. ROTTERDAMSCHE LLOYD (1918), 34 T. 8654. —— Limitation of amount recoverable.]—The steamship Countess, which was lying in a dock belonging to the Board, negligently went ahead instead of astern & crashed through the dock gates into the river, carrying with her a number of barges, some of which were sunk. The Countess was holed & had to be beached, &, the Board's assistant marine surveyor having certified that she was a danger to the safe navigation of the port, the Board took charge of her under the powers of the Mersey Docks & Harbour Act, 1912, & repaired her at a cost of £1,000. The damage done to the Board's dock amounted to £10,000 & the damage done to the barges to £55,000. The statutory amount of the Countess's liability under the Merchant Shipping Acts at £8 per ton was £4,468. The Board detained the Countess under their statutory powers in respect of the damage done to the dock. Numerous actions having been commenced by the barge owners, the shipowners commenced a limitation action, in which they claimed to limit their liability to the amount ascertained under the Merchant Shipping Acts, & to have that amount distributed rateably among the claimants, & in that action an order was made staying the barge owners' actions. They also commenced an action against the Board for delivery up of the vessel & damages for detention. Ultimately the vessel was released on payment by the shipowners into ct. of £5,500, representing (a) the statutory amount of their liability, & (b) the expenses incurred by the Board in connection with the repair & detention of the vessel. No question arose as to the latter sum. The Board claimed payment of their claim for damages, up to the limit of the shipowners' statutory liability, out of the fund in ct. in priority to the claims of the barge owners, by virtue of their right to detain the vessel, & the sum representing the vessel, under their private Act of 1858. The barge owners claimed that the fund ought to be distributed rateably among the several claimants, including the Board, according to the amounts of their claims:—Held: (1) the exercise by the Board of their statutory power to detain the ship conferred on them a possessory lien; (2) 1900 Act, s. 1, of which impliedly incorporated 1894 Act, s. 504, neither expressly nor by implication affected the lien of the Board, beyond limiting the amount for which the lien could be exercised; (3) the Ct., in distributing the statutory amount of the shipowners' liability rateably among the claimants, ought to have regard to the priorities as well as to the amounts of the claims; (4) consequently, the whole of the fund should be paid out to the Board.—MERSEY DOCKS & HARBOUR BOARD v. HAY, THE COUNTESS, [1923] A. of the printed regulations of the London Dock Co. it is provided, that "orders for delivery cannot be acted upon unless signed by the party in whose name the goods stand in the co.'s books, or by a person duly authorised, in writing under the hand of the principal, to sign them." Wine was entered in the books of the co. in the name of S., clerk to W., but the bills of lading were in the hands of H., the consignee of the wine. The wine not having been approved by W., H. agreed to take it back, & applied to W. to return a part of it: but W. refused to do so until his acceptance for the wine should be returned to him. H. then exhibited the bills of lading to the dock co., who informed W. that they would deliver the wine to H. unless they should be restrained from so doing. W. & S. thereupon filed a bill against the co. & H. for an injunction to restrain the co. from delivering the wine to H. without the written order of W. & S., or one of them, & praying that the co. & H. might be ordered to pay the costs of the suit:—Held: as the legal title to the wine was in H. by virtue of the bill of lading, the co. were entitled to their costs, which, under the circumstances of the case, were ordered to be paid equally by pltfs. & H., pltfs. & H. also bearing their own costs equally.—WRIGHT v. LONDON DOCK CO. & HEALEY (1859), 32 L. 8659. Agreement giving preferential right to berth—Breach of agreement—Wrongful occupation of berth by other vessel—Whether accident beyond control of dock company.]—A shipping co. had a preferential right to occupy a certain berth in a dock on Wednesday & Saturday in each week & were not entitled to use any other berth in the same port. The berth was situated at a wharf in a channel which was partly natural & partly artificial. The agreement between the two cos. provided that in the event of any accident beyond the control of the dock co. which caused loss or delay to the shipping co. the latter should be entitled to use some other berth, the dock co. being under no liability to make good or pay compensation for such loss or delay. On Oct. 28, 1911, the shipping co.'s steamer P. arrived in the port, & found that the particular berth to which she should have gone was occupied by the steamship B., belonging to a Dutch co., which had gone to the berth & remained there contrary to the orders of the dock co. Owing to shortness of water in the dock the B. could not be moved to admit of the P. occupying the berth, & the P. accordingly went into an inner dock by the direction of the dock co., & by reason of shortness of water was detained there for a week, & consequently lost a complete round voyage. A portion of her cargo was shut out, & taken on by the next steamer of the line. The shipping co. claimed from the dock co. damages for the delay suffered by the P. & the dock co. in turn sued the owners of the B. to recover any damages they might be called upon to pay to the shipping co.:—Held: the dock co. were liable to the shipping co., as they had not in fact used their best endeavours to ensure that the shipping co. should have the use of the berth, & the wrongful action of the owners of the B. was not an accident beyond the "control of the dock co." within the agreement; (2) the owners of the B. being guilty of a trespass, were liable to pay damages to the dock co. but not in respect of the whole detention of the P., as she did not go into the inner dock at the order of the master of the B.; & (3) the owners of the B. were not liable to pay the dock co.'s costs in defending the action brought by the shipping co., because it was unreasonable for the dock co. to defend the action.—SOUTH WALES & LIVERPOOL S.S. 8660. Exception from liability clause—Damage due to defective apparatus—Supplied by dock company.]—Defts. were the owners of a graving dock, which pltfs.' ship used under a contract for reward. By the terms of the contract defts. supplied the necessary blocks for supporting the vessel while in the dock. The contract also provided that "The owner of a vessel using the graving dock must do so at his own risk, it being hereby expressly provided that the co. are not to be responsible for any accident or damage to a vessel . . . whilst in the graving dock, whatever may be the nature of such accident or damage or howsoever arising." Owing to the negligence of defts. the blocks upon which the keel of pltfs.' ship rested were uneven in height, whereby she suffered damage:—Held: even assuming that the obligation of defts. to provide blocks & block caps was a fundamental obligation of the contract, the language of the exemption clause was such that it must be read as covering failure to perform any such obligation & as covering negligence arising from want of care in the performance of such obligation, & consequently defts. were exempted from liability.—PYMAN S.S. About the same time the corpn. of Boston was authorised to construct new docks on the Witham at Boston by the Boston Dock Act, 1881. The Act contained provisions for the protection of the Witham Outfall Board & other bodies, & by sect. 9 thereof the corpn. "in exercising the powers of the Act in relation to the construction, maintenance & use of the dock & the widening & embanking of the river & other works," was to observe & be bound by certain regulations. lations was: "Any damage or injury done at any time to the fascine works or other works under the jurisdiction of the board shall be made good by the corpn. to the reasonable satisfaction of the engineer of the board." In 1922 a steamer passing out of the port of Boston down the new cut grounded on the bank causing much damage & becoming an obstruction to navigation. The steamer having been abandoned by the owners was sold by the Boston Corpn., but before she could be got off caused more damage, & the cost of getting her off the bank greatly exceeded the price obtained for the vessel:—Held: (1) the expression "in exercising the powers" of the Act must be construed "so long as the powers of the Act in relation to the construction, maintenance & use of the dock are exercised," &, therefore, the corpn. was liable to the board to make good the damage to the banks of the river; (2) the reference to the "fascine or other works under the jurisdiction of the board" included not only the original works constructed after the passing of the Act, but all subsequent works for the time being controlled by the board; the "damage" referred to could not be limited to actionable damage, & the board were not limited by the Act to a particular remedy contained in the regulations to the Act. The sect. should be construed as a statutory contract between the parties.—WITHAM OUTFALL BOARD v. BOSTON CORPN. (1926), 136 L. T. 756; 91 J. P. 98; 25 L. G. R. 171, C. A.

SUB-SECT. 2.—NEGLIGENCE.

A. In General.

8662. Duty to take reasonable care.]—Where the Executive Govt. possessed the control & management of a tidal harbour with authority to remove obstructions in it, & the public had a right to navigate therein, subject to the harbour regulations & without payment of harbour dues, the staiths & wharves belonging to the Executive Govt. which received wharfage & tonnage dues in respect of vessels using them:—Held: there was a duty imposed by law upon the Executive Govt. to take reasonable care that vessels using the staiths in the ordinary manner might do so without damage to the vessel. Reasonable care is not shown when after notice of danger at a particular spot, no inquiry is made as to its existence & extent, & no warning is given.—R. v. WILLIAMS (1884), 9 App. Cas. 418; 53 L. 8665. Liability & right to levy tolls complementary.]—Persons who have a duty to perform, & who may be made responsible for injuries if they know of causes of mischief which in the discharge of that duty they ought to remedy, are equally responsible if they negligently remain ignorant of those causes of mischief, & so leave them unremedied.

A private person, or a co., having a right to levy tolls in respect of the performance of a particular work, will be liable in damages for injuries occasioned by performing it improperly.

A corporate body authorised to perform such a work, & receiving tolls in respect of it, though obtaining no profit for itself from such tolls, but collecting them for the maintenance of the work & the possible future benefit of the public, is equally responsible for injuries arising from the improper performance of such work, & the funds thus obtained must discharge that liability.

G., the owner of a cargo which was damaged by reason of the ship's stranding on a mud bank negligently left at the entrance of a harbour vested in the Mersey Board by statute, sued the board for damage. The defence was that the board acted under a statute; that they derived no personal benefit from the management of the docks; that they took no part personally in the management, but merely appointed servants & officers in discharge of their public duty, & that the negligence was not theirs, but was solely that of one of their servants:—Held: the case of public statutory trustees, if not servants of the Crown, did not differ from that of absolute owners levying tolls for their own benefit, & the board were liable in damages to G.—MERSEY DOCKS TRUSTEES v. GIBBS, MERSEY DOCKS TRUSTEES v. PENHALLOW (1866), L. 8670. Contributory negligence of master of ship.]—When a vessel is within the jurisdiction of the harbour master by law empowered to give compulsory orders, & he is giving his orders as to the place of anchorage or otherwise, it is only in the last resort, when the danger of following such orders is fully obvious that those on board are at liberty to disregard the orders, even though they may be under the impression that the harbour master is making a mistake.

The sailing ship Janets & Ann was coming into Kirkcudbright Dock when she ran on a bank at the West pier, which was covered with water, & was damaged. At the time of the accident the vessel was within the jurisdiction of the harbour master, & was coming in under his orders. The master of the ship was at the helm in charge of the ship, & was assisted in the navigation by two local fishermen, who were aware of the bank; but the master was ignorant of it. The harbour master stood on the west pier & ordered the ship to "come on," being unaware it was then an ebb tide, when to sail into the dock was a dangerous operation. The master in obeying the order ported the helm, & the ship gradually approached the shore One of the fishermen hailed the harbour master, "Be sure to tell us when to let go the anchor." The order again was "Come on"; & then, too late to avoid the grounding, the harbour master perceived his mistake, & ordered the anchor to be let go. It was admitted by the harbour master that his intention was to bring the ship into the dock by sailing without warping; & that he did not know the tide was ebbing until after the ship had grounded:—Held: the harbour master was alone to blame, & there was no contributory negligence on the part of the master who was in charge of the ship; & the failure of the persons on board who knew of the danger to inform the master did not absolve the harbour master from the consequence of his negligence.—RENEY v. KIRKCUDBRIGHT MAGISTRATES, [1892] A. The trustees denied negligence & pleaded that the faulty navigation of the ship contributed to the collision. The second was a similar action by the owners of another ship & was met by a similar plea. 8677. —— —— ——.]—Where harbour comrs., who are authorised & required by statute to execute works of improvement & maintenance in a harbour, & are empowered to make & maintain docks in connection therewith, & to take harbour & dock tolls & dues in respect of the use of the harbour & docks, advertise that there is a certain depth of water on the sill of a dock belonging to them, they thereby incur, towards shipowners who send their ships to the dock on the faith of that advertisement, the obligation of at least using reasonable care to provide for an access from & to the sea to & from the dock with a sufficient depth of water under the normal conditions of the time of year for all ships of such draught as to enable them to pass over the dock sill.

Therefore, where in such a case the comrs. had not used such care, but had allowed silt to accumulate at the entrance of their harbour, & a ship had consequently been detained for four days in the dock:—Held: the comrs. were liable to the shipowners in damages for the detention of their ship.

Semble: a warranty of the accessibility of a dock may be implied from such an advertisement, for ships of such draught, as before mentioned, so far as that accessibility depends on the condition of places within the harbour works or so situated that their condition is within the comrs.' powers of inspection & control.—BEDE S.S. CO. v. RIVER WEAR COMRS., [1907] 1 K. B. 310; 76 L. J. K. B. 434; 96 L. T. 370; 10 Asp. M. L. C. 370, C. A.

8678. Failure to maintain works—Defence of Act of God.]—The Victoria Dock co., a co.nc cor porated by Act of Parliament, in pursua e of their powers, in 1858 demised a portion of their dock wall, or bank, to the Thames Graving Dock co., the lessees covenanting to construct a graving dock on land of their own, & make & at all times maintain a channel through the demised part of the wall into such graving dock. The Graving Dock co. constructed their dock & the channel in accordance with the covenants in the lease. The undertaking of the Thames Graving Dock co. was afterwards acquired by the Victoria Graving Dock co. The Victoria Docks co was afterwards amalgamated with the London & St. Katherine's Dock co. On Jan. 18, 1881, there was an unusually high tide & a strong gale, which was at the height at the highest point of the tide. The high tide & gale combined forced the water in the graving dock, which had entered it through the channel demised by the said lease, over the banks & flooded pltf.'s land. Pltf. sued both cos. for damages. The ct. came to the conclusion, upon the evidence, that the banks of the graving dock had not been properly maintained at the height required by the Dagenham Comrs. who are the comrs. of sewers for the district:—Held: neither the height of the tide nor the force of the wind, nor the coincidence of their happening together, could be considered as the Act of God in the sense which would discharge the Graving Dock co. from liability; the St. Katherine's Dock co., being under a liability to maintain their own wall, & having leased it with a covenant which bound the lessees to make an opening in it, were in the same position as if it had been cut by a contractor employed by them, & were liable for any damage resulting from their lessees' neglect in taking proper precautions against the natural results of such opening.

I have come to the conclusion that there was in every way want of care which destroys any protection or excuse by the Act of God, & a want of care which at common law would certainly render the Graving Dock co. liable. I think the St. Katherine's Dock co. are liable, because I think they had the duty imposed upon them of maintaining the wall round the entrance to the lift cut, & if they cut away that wall they were bound to substitute another (FIELD, J.).—BURT v. VICTORIA GRAVING DOCK CO., LTD. & LONDON & ST. Defts. interrupted that course of conduct, & pltf. in consequence met with an accident. There was no evidence that pltf. on the faith of the expectation that defts. would continue their course of conduct was misled by their discontinuance:—Held: defts. were not liable. Qu.: if there had been evidence that pltf. had been so misled, defts. would have been liable. —LOADER v. LONDON & INDIA DOCKS JOINT COMMITTEE (1891), 56 J. 8675 1. Unsafe condition of dock.]—Under the authority conferred by Municipal Act, R. S. O. c. 223, s. 562, defts., a municipal corpn., built a dock on the Detroit river, & passed a bye-law providing for the collection of wharfage fees from those using the dock, one item of the tariff of fees being ten cents per thousand for loading & unloading bricks; a period of 48 hours was allowed for removing freight placed on the dock, & fifty per cent. was to be added if that period was exceeded. Pltf. unloaded 34,000 bricks from a vessel upon a dock, whereupon the dock being by reason of some defect incapable of sustaining such a weight, collapsed, & the greater part of the bricks were sunk & lost to pltf.:—Held: defts., having placed the dock in such a position as invited any vessel owner desiring to unload a cargo to do so, if prepared to pay the dock charges, which the statute gave defts. authority to levy, & having passed a bye-law establishing tolls for the use of it, thereby invited the public to make use of it for such purposes as public docks are ordinarily used for, &, if they wished to limit the use of it, they should have made that known in some public way; &, the evidence showing that the mode adopted in this case of unloading & piling the bricks was that usually adopted at public docks, defts. were liable for the loss.—THOMPSON v. SANDWICH CORPN. In an action by pltfs. against defts. for negligence, defts. contended that the blocks would have been sufficient for a normally constructed vessel of same size, but that the vessel was of unusual construction & pltfs. ought to have warned them of the hidden danger. A substantial number of ships of the same type had previously docked from time to time in defts.' dock:—Held: defts., in accepting the ship without any inquiry & without demur, must be held to be liable for the damage.—THE LANCASTRIAN 1916), 32 T. The harbour comrs. had laid the berth at a quay with skids in the form of a grid on which vessels would rest at low tide. The injuries were due to the berth having been allowed to become defective by the skids not being in a uniform gradient, & by several of them, at the part where the forward portion of the vessel would rest as she was berthed, being wanting. The defects could have been ascertained by the harbour comrs. by the exercise of reasonable care:—Held: the harbour comrs. were bound to use reasonable diligence to keep the berth safe, & they had failed to use such reasonable diligence, consequently they were liable to the shipowners for the injuries sustained by their vessel.—S.S. the usual rights as to tolls, & duties as to maintenance, & against a railway co., owners of a wharf, to recover the amount of damage sustained by their vessel by reason of the defective condition of a berth alongside the wharf in the harbour, the defence on the part of the trustees substantially was that as they had not received any report from the local pilots, upon whom the duty was imposed by their bylaws of making periodical inspections & taking soundings, they had not been negligent in being unaware of the defective condition of the berth. Secondly, that the defect was due to the wrongful act of those in charge of a steamer throwing the stokehold refuse overboard immediately prior to the arrival of pltf.'s vessel, &, therefore, it was not reasonably possible for the trustees to be aware of the defect, as periodical inspections would not have detected it. The defence on the part of the railway co. was that the responsibility of keeping the berth in proper condition rested with the trustees, who they knew employed the pilots to take the necessary soundings, they were not negligent in being unaware of a defect due to a breach of the harbour byelaws by persons unknown:—Held: (1) both defts. were liable—the trustees because they had negligently omitted to perform the duty laid down in Mersey Docks Trustees v. Gibbs, No. 8665, ante, of taking reasonable care to see whether the harbour, including the berth in question, was in a fit condition, & they could not shift this duty on to the local pilots who were not their servants, & whose duty to sound was for the purpose of enabling them efficiently to navigate the vessels employing them; (2) assuming without evidence that the defect had been caused so shortly before pltf.'s vessel came in that periodical examinations would not have detected it, this defence was not open to them, because they had not performed their duty of examination of the berth by their servants, &, therefore, could not be heard to say that if they had done their duty the defect would not have been detected. The railway co. was liable under the rule in The Moorcock (1889), 14 P. D. 64, because as owners of the wharf they had invited pltf.'s vessel alongside for profit to themselves, & could not rely upon the pilots performing the duty cast upon them by the trustees, for, in their capacity as wharf owners, the railway co. had the opportunity of ascertaining the condition of the berth, & should, therefore, have either satisfied themselves that it was reasonably fit, or warned those in charge of the vessel that they had not done so.—THE BEARN, [1906] P. 48; 75 L. 8694. Damage by tugs employed by dock company.]—By an Act for improving & maintaining a harbour, the comrs. were empowered to build or provide steam tugs for towing vessels into or out of the harbour, & to receive for the use of such vessels such reasonable compensation as they should fix. The comrs. entered into an arrangement with the proprietors of certain steam vessels to perform this duty for them at certain specified rates of charge; the comrs. paying them in addition a certain sum annually, & the vessels being placed under the direction & control of the harbour master. A vessel having sustained damage in consequence of the negligence & want of skill of the master & crew of a tug, whilst being towed into the harbour, the owner brought an action in the county ct. against the harbour comrs., &, under the direction of the judge, recovered a verdict. The ct., on appeal, set aside the verdict, holding that the decision of the judge could not, upon any inference which could legitimately be drawn from the facts before him, be correct in point of law.—CUTHBERTSON v. PARSONS (1852), 12 C. 8695. —— Acting under directions of harbour master.]—A steamship was brought from the entrance of a dock to her berth by two tugs, & was made fast; but was unable to haul on her winches, so as to get completely into position alongside the quay, owing to a barge, attached to a buoy, being in the way. The dockmaster sent a man from each of the tugs to loosen the barge's headfast, & directed a third tug to tow the barge away; but, in so doing, the barge was negligently allowed to come into contact with the propeller of the steamship & sustained such damage that she sank with her cargo. In an action of damage by collision brought by the barge owners against the dock owners, the dock owners admitted liability, but brought in the steamship owners as third parties liable to indemnify them under a towage contract made between the dock owners & a firm of ship repairers who had undertaken to bring the vessel from their yard to her berth at their risk. By the towage contract the dock owners were to supply tugs to assist in transporting the steamship within the dock on condition that the masters & crews of the tugs should cease to be under the dock owners' control in connection with the towage, & become subject to the orders & control of the master or person in charge of the vessel, & be the servants of the owners thereof:—Held: the steamship owners were not liable, as third parties, to indemnify the dock owners, for, whether the contract to supply the two tugs was made with the ship repairers or with the steamship owners, that contract was at an end, &, therefore, the men from the two tugs, directed by the dockmaster to loosen the headfast, had resumed their position as servants of the dock owners, & the action of the third tug, under the direction of the dockmaster, was independent of the transporting contract which applied only to the two tugs.—THE KATE, [1907] P. 296; 76 L. 8710. —— Servant acting within scope of authority—Harbour master.]—It being within the scope of the authority of the harbour master of Falmouth Harbour, upon the proper construction of the Acts relating thereto to regulate the place & manner of beaching a vessel therein for repairs, an order given by him to those in charge of a vessel to let go their anchor in such a way that the vessel sits upon it in beaching & is thereby injured, is negligence, for which, the Harbour Comrs., as his employers, are liable.

Where a vessel is, in obedience to bye-laws, being beached in a harbour under the directions of the harbour master, & in order to reach the place of beaching selected by the harbour master she is properly passing through waters outside the limits of the authority of the Harbour Comrs., whose servant the harbour master is, & while outside such limits damage is occasioned to her by the negligence of the harbour master in giving an improper order, the Harbour Comrs. are liable for the damage thereby occasioned.—THE RHOSINA (1885), 10 P. 8711. —— —— ——.]—A ship entered a dock to load. While crossing the dock her propeller got foul of a rope so that the shaft was jammed & the engines could not be worked. There being no dry dock the ship was with the assent of the harbour master put into a lock which served as the entrance to the dock in order that the water might be drawn off & the propeller cleared, the harbour master representing to the captain of the ship that the bottom of the lock was level, & that the ship might easily ground there. When the ship took the ground, being then heavily laden, she sustained serious injury, owing to the existence of a sill which projected several inches above the level of the bottom across the middle of the lock. The dock was regulated by statute which empowered the owners to take tolls for ships entering the dock, & required persons in command of vessels within the dock to place them as the harbour master should direct, under penalties. Vessels had on previous occasions been grounded in the lock under similar circumstances. The owners of the ship having brought an action against the dock owners to recover damages for the injury to the ship:—Held: the harbour master in informing the captain of the ship where she might safely ground & in permitting the ship to use the lock for the above purpose was acting within the scope of his authority; he was guilty of a breach of duty in giving that permission & making the representations he did, when he knew, or ought to have known, of the existence of the sill; & the dock owners were liable to the owners of the ship for damages for the injury.

8712. —— No evidence of negligence—Harbour master.]—A local Act for better preserving the harbour of Maryport, & for lighting & otherwise improving the township of Maryport, sect. 7, appoints trustees to carry the Act into execution. By sect. 21, they may elect a harbour master, who, by sect. 47, may direct any person having the command of any vessel entering into or being within the harbour to anchor & place the same in such situation within the harbour as he shall direct. After the passing of the Act some coals were shot into a berth in the harbour which rendered it dangerous. The trustees at a board meeting having had notice of the state of the berth, gave directions to their clerk to have the coals removed, & the coals were accordingly partly, but not sufficiently removed at their expense. After this, the harbour master, without the knowledge of the trustees, directed pltf. to place his vessel in the berth. He did so, & the vessel while lying there sustained damage in consequence of the berth being unsafe. The harbour master knew that the berth had been unsafe, & what had been done to it, but neither he nor the trustees knew that the berth continued unsafe when he directed pltf. to place his vessel in it:—Held: there was no evidence to warrant a verdict against the trustees.—METCALFE v. HETHERINGTON (1860), 5 H. & N. 719; 2 L. standing on one of the pier-heads. At the same time an official of the dock co., a lock foreman in uniform, standing on the other pier ordered a ketch, belonging to the other defts., & lying within the prescribed limits of the authority of the dock co., to swing round for the purpose ofentering the dock. By a second & as it was found improper order, the lock foreman directed some barges, to which the ketch was fast, also to swing, with the result that the ketch, being unable to check herself by the rope which was fast to the barges, without any negligence in those in charge of her, came into collision with pltfs.' steam vessel:—Held: (1) deft. dock co. was alone liable for the damage sustained by pltfs.' vessel, as the lock foreman was a deputy or assistant of the dock master within the meaning of rule 2 of the bye-laws, whose orders those in charge of the ketch were bound, under Harbours, Docks, & Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 27), to obey, & as the relationship of master & servant did not exist between the dock official & the owners of the ketch, they were not responsible for his negligent order; (2) pltfs. acted reasonably in joining both parties as defts., & as deft. dock co. threw the blame on the other defts., but were themselves alone to blame, pltfs.' costs against both defts., & the costs of the owner of the ketch, both in the ct. below & on appeal, must fall on the dock co. —THE MYSTERY, [1902] P. 115; 71 L. While the barge was in the lock on its way out from the dock to the river, it was damaged through the negligence of defts.' servants:—Held: (1) the words of the condition were adequate to exempt defts. from liability for the negligence of their servants; (2) the word "dock" in the above condition must be interpreted as including the lock, & therefore defts. were exempt from liability. —FORBES, ABBOTT & LENNARD, LTD. v. GREAT WESTERN RY. 8718. Right to protection as public authorities—Limitation of time for action.]—By an Act of Parliament, a co. was established for making & maintaining certain docks & basins, & was authorised to appoint a dock master, who was to have power to direct the mooring, unmooring, moving, & removing of all vessels into or being in the docks, & to have the control over the space of one hundred yards of the entrances into the docks, so far as related to the transporting of vessels coming in or going out; & the co. was to be sued in the name of their treasurer; & if any action should be brought against any person for anything done in pursuance of the Act, such action should be commenced within six calendar months after the fact committed. An action having been brought against the treasurer for an injury done to a vessel, within one hundred yards of the entrance of the docks, by reason of improper directions having been given by the dock master in transporting her into the docks:—Held: the giving of such directions was a thing done in pursuance of the Act of Parliament, & the action ought therefore to have been brought within six calendar months after such directions were given.—SMITH v. SHAW (1829), 10 B. & C. 277; L. & Welsb. 98; 5 Man. & Ry. 8722. Costs—Scale of taxation.]—Pltfs., owners of a steamship, brought an action in the Admlty. Divn. of the High Ct., claiming damages against defts., a port & harbour authority, for injuries sustained by the vessel owing to the alleged negligence of the servants of defts. in not keeping the bed of the harbour in a proper & fit state for the vessel to ground upon at low water. Defts. by their defence alleged (inter alia) that the damage was occasioned by the inherent weakness & unfitness of the vessel to take the ground with the cargo she had on board. The trial of the action lasted the greater part of four days, & owing to the nature of the defence set up, several engineers & surveyors were called on both sides, who produced plans in support of their respective views as to the strength & construction of the vessel. Judgment was given for pltfs. on the ground that the damage sustained by the vessel was due to a ridge of gravel left in the bed of the harbour by the negligence of the servants of defts. On the question of costs:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to an order for costs on the higher scale inasmuch as the case was special in its nature, involving the calling of a number of scientific witnesses, the preparation of plans, & had been so presented as greatly to facilitate its trial.—THE ROBIN, [1892] P. 95; 67 L. Defts. thereupon claimed, under above sub-sect., 1893, to recover from unsuccessful pltfs. their costs as between solr. & client:—Held: defts. were a public authority, & as such entitled to have their costs so taxed, for in the erection & working of the staith they must be taken to have acted in "intended" execution of a public duty within the meaning of the Act, although the staith, & the line of railway connected with it, might not have been constructed in strict conformity with their statutory powers, the question of deviation from deposited plans being for the parties affected thereby, such as the neighbouring owners, & not for pltfs.—THE JOHANNESBURG, [1907] P. 65; 76 L. Authority to requisition.]—See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. XI., p. 549, Nos. 520–523.

8733. What amounts to requisition—Effective positive control—Constituted by definite order.]—By Regulations made under Emergency Powers Act, 1920 (c. 55), the Govt. was empowered to requisition ships, to prohibit the unloading of ships, & to take possession of (inter alia) stocks of coal. The Regulations further made provision for the assessment of "the compensation payable in respect of any property which is requisitioned or of which possession is taken under these Regulations."

During a coal strike in 1921, when the Regulations were in force, suppliants' vessel arrived in the Thames on Apr. 2, with a cargo of coal for certain consignees. On the same day a Customs officer boarded the vessel, & acting on instructions told the chief officer that "in no circumstances is the vessel to discharge without permission." The vessel accordingly lay with the coal on board till Apr. 21, on which date the Govt. requisitioned the coal, & on Apr. 22 the vessel was ordered by a Govt. department to proceed to Erith & discharge there, which she accordingly did, the discharge being completed on Apr. 23. Suppliants, contending that the vessel had been requisitioned &/or that possession of her had been taken by the Govt., claimed compensation under the Regulations, or, alternatively, at common law, for her detention from Apr. 2 to Apr. 23:—Held: (1) the word "requisition" in the Regulations meant some effective & positive dominion or control constituted by a definite order given under the Regulations; no such effective & positive dominion or control was exercised till the vessel was directed to proceed to Erith & discharge her cargo there; & therefore under the Regulations suppliants were entitled to compensation in respect of two days only, Apr. 22 & 23; (2) assuming that the Crown has no right at common law to take a subject's property for reasons of State without paying compensation, that rule can only apply, if it does apply, to a case where property is actually taken possession of or used by the Govt., or where, by the order of a competent authority, it is placed at the disposal of the Govt.; a mere negative prohibition, though it involves interference with an owners' enjoyment of property, does not, merely because it is obeyed, carry with it at common law any right to compensation; & therefore that suppliants had no right at common law to claim in respect of the period up to Apr. 22, & as regards the two days, Apr. 22, 23, they could not be in a better position than the Regulations which superseded any common law right if such otherwise existed.—FRANCE FENWICK & CO. v. R., [1927] 1 K. 8739. —— Owners agreeing to bear marine risks.]—A steamer belonging to claimants was requisitioned by the Admlty. in Jan. 1916, under a Proclamation issued in Aug. 1914, & after a first voyage she was sent with a cargo of ore & pyrites to a firm of American munition makers whose contract provided that they should be bound to supply only if the ore was sent to them at a certain rate of freight. The ship was sent at this rate of freight, which was lower than the current market rate. On the voyage the ship was severely damaged by marine risks, &, in an arbn. between the owners & the Admlty., the arbitrators found that the owners were bound by the form of charter known as T.99, which expressly threw the burden of marine risks on the owners. A case was stated by the arbitrators for the opinion of the ct. on the following questions : (a) Whether the Admlty. had the right to employ the ship on a voyage earning freight payable to the Admlty., & whether claimants were entitled to receive any & what extra payment & compensation in respect thereof ; (b) whether the Admlty. were liable to compensate the owners for damage received on the voyage ; & (c) whether marine risks should be deemed to be borne by the Admlty. or by the owners :—Held : (1) the Admlty. had a right to requisition the ship under the Proclamation in the national emergency which existed in Jan. 1916, & to employ her on the voyage in question & the owners were not entitled to extra compensation as the fact that freight was payable to the Admlty. was not material ; (2) there was evidence to support the arbitrators' finding that the owners agreed to bear the marine risks ; (3) consequently the Admlty. were not liable to compensate the owners for damage received on the voyage.—CROWN OF LEON (OWNERS) v. ADMIRALTY COMRS., [1921] 1 K. During the currency of the charterparty the tug was requisitioned by the Admlty. :—Held : (1) the loss of the average net earnings of the tug during the period of the requisition was a " direct loss or damage " by reason of interference with the charterers' business within Indemnity Act, 1920 (c. 48), s. 2 (1) (b), & they were entitled to compensation ; (2) the charterers would apart from the Act have no legal right to compensation ; (3) in accordance with Indemnity Act, 1920 (c. 48), s. 2 (2) (iii) (b), compensation must be assessed as directed by Part II. of the schedule to the Act.—ELLIOTT STEAM TUG CO. v. SHIPPING CONTROLLER, [1922] 1 K. schedule to the Act. According to those principles the payment was to be based upon what were known as the "Blue Book rates," "subject to such increases or modifications thereof as may have been agreed to before Jan. 1, 1920," or, in cases where those rates had not been applied, on some other estimate of the profits which the owner could have made if there had been no war, & was to be assessed without reference to the increase in the market value of tonnage due to the war.

Certain ships were requisitioned in 1918, in respect of which the Admlty. had previously agreed with their owner that if they were requisitioned they should be paid for at the market rate & not at the Blue Book rates. The owner claimed in a petition of right to be paid the free market rate. The Admlty. claimed that the rates payable were fixed by an Order known as the Limitation of Freights (French Ports) Order, 1918, & that in any event the matter was not within the jurisdiction of the ct. On the plea to the jurisdiction of the ct.:—Held: the terms of the Admlty. agreement were not a modification of the Blue Book rates within the meaning of the schedule, that the principles of the schedule being inconsistent with those terms were not applicable to suppliant's claim, that his claim for payment consequently did not come within above Act, s. 2 (1) (a); & the jurisdiction of the ct. to deal with the matter was not transferred to the Board of Arbn.—BROOKE v. R., [1921] 2 K. Above Act, s. 2 (1), provides that, notwithstanding anything in the foregoing sect. restricting the right of taking legal proceedings—(a) the owner of a ship which has been requisitioned at any time during the war "shall be entitled to payment or compensation for the use of the same & for services rendered during the employment of the same in Govt. service, & compensation for loss or damage thereby occasioned"; such payment or compensation to be assessed on the principles & by the tribunal thereinafter mentioned.

In Mar. 1915, a steamship was requisitioned by the Admlty. & was taken under a charterparty known as Form B. which fixed the rate of hire, gave the Admlty. the right of purchase at a certain price, & rendered them liable for all risks & expenses of the ship. The ship, whilst in the employment of the Admlty., was sunk by a heavily armed German vessel, & the owners, by petition of right, claimed compensation against the Admlty. for her loss. Before the petition came on for trial above Act came into force, & the Crown pleaded that by virtue of this Act the petition should be discharged, & this point was tried as a preliminary question of law:—Held: (1) the case fell within above Act, s. 1 (1); (2) it was excepted from the benefit of paragraph (b) of the proviso to that sub-sect., inasmuch as the claim came within above Act, s. 2 (1) (a), & the petition of right should be discharged.—A.-G. v. ROYAL MAIL STEAM PACKET CO., [1922] 2 A. During the currency of the charter the Govt. directed the ship to go on a voyage to Cuba. That voyage resulted in a loss to the charterers, who also lost the profits which they would have made if the ship had been used for the Mediterranean trade. The charterers claimed as compensation under the Act, (a) a sum representing the net loss sustained by them as the result of the directed voyage, & (b) a sum representing the profit they would have made by the voyage intended to be made in the Mediterranean:—Held: claimants were not entitled to compensation under the Act.—MOSS S.S. In Feb. 1917, when the barge was nearing completion, the Admlty. requisitioned her, altering her construction for purposes of their own, & in Aug. of the same year they purchased her for the original contract price to be paid by them to the shipbuilders. If the barge had not been requisitioned, she would have been completed & delivered to the Board in Apr. 1917. Owing to difficulties arising from the war it was impossible for the Board to replace the barge by another of like construction in less than three years from the last-mentioned date, or at a cost less than three times the contract price of the original barge. In proceedings to determine the amount of the compensation which ought, in these circumstances, to be paid by the Admlty. to the Board:—Held: (1) the Board were entitled to recover the amount of the difference between the contract price of the original barge & the increased cost to them of replacing her; (2) the Board were not entitled to any compensation for the loss of the services of the barge during the above-mentioned period of three years, the damage thereby caused being too remote.—Re MERSEY DOCKS & HARBOUR BOARD & ADMIRALTY COMRS., [1920] 3 K. On Dec. 31, 1915, in pursuance of instructions from the Admlty., the ship was steaming at full speed on a very dark night with her lights obscured, being engaged in the operation of evacuating troops from Gallipoli, when she sighted on her starboard bow a French battleship which was also steaming without lights, but almost immediately disclosed them. The St. Oswald ported her helm & disclosed her port light, & the battleship almost simultaneously starboarded her helm. The ships were thus brought on to courses forming intersecting circles, & a collision occurred which caused the St. Oswald to sink & become a total loss. 8751. —— —— ——.]—Primâ facie the transport by sea of war material in time of war from one war base to another war base is a warlike operation within the meaning of the usual f.c. & s. warranty in a marine policy.

Though the ct. may take judicial notice of the existence of a state of war between this country & another, it may not take judicial notice of the date of any particular military movement in the course of the war.

On Jan. 1, 1916, a collision occurred after dark in the Mediterranean between the B. & the G., which resulted in the loss of the G. Both ships were sailing at full speed & without lights in accordance with Admlty. regulations, & no blame attached to either. The G. was requisitioned by the Govt. of the Commonwealth of Australia upon the terms of a charterparty which provided that the Govt. should accept war risks but not ordinary marine risks. The question whether the loss was due to a war risk was referred to an arbitrator, who found that at the time of the collision the G. was carrying a general cargo, & that the B. "was under requisition by the British Govt. & was carrying ambulance wagons & other Govt. stores from one war base (Mudros) to another war base (Alexandria)":—Held: on the latter finding the B. was engaged on a warlike operation, the loss of the G. was a direct consequence of that warlike operation, & the Commonwealth Govt. were liable under the charterparty.—COMMONWEALTH SHIPPING REPRESENTATIVE v. PENINSULAR & ORIENTAL BRANCH SERVICE, [1923] A. On May 6, 1918, the steamship, while on a voyage with a cargo of iron ore, was lost at night by collision with another ship also carrying cargo when both ships were, in compliance with Admlty regulations, being navigated without lights. No negligence was proved on the part of either vessel & the collision was proximately caused by the absence of lights. The Admlty. regulations were issued as a precaution against possible enemy action, but no submarines were known or suspected to be present at the time of the collision:—

8755. —— —— ——.]—The Warilda, a steamship, was requisitioned by the Govt. in 1916, upon the terms of charterparty T.99, under which the owners undertook marine risks & the Admlty. undertook war risks, including "all consequences of hostilities or warlike operations." She was used as an ambulance transport & was armed with a gun & had on board two or three Royal Navy men to work it, & her master was instructed that, if he were attacked by a submarine, he should take advantage of any exceptional opportunity of ramming the submarine. While carrying a number of wounded men with doctors & nurses from Havre to Southampton &, by order of the Admlty., proceeding at night at full speed & without lights, she came into collision with another vessel & was injured. The Warilda was alone to blame for the collision, which was due to the negligence of those in charge of her. In a petition of right by the owners of the Warilda, who claimed that their vessel had been damaged in consequence of a warlike operation:—Held: (1) the vessel was at the time of the accident engaged in a warlike operation; (2) in the circumstances the negligence of those in charge of her was immaterial.—ADELAIDE S.S. 8756. —— —— Coaling of minesweepers.]—The Admlty. chartered a collier from the owners during the war under the charterparty known as T.99, which provided in effect that the Admlty. would be liable for the risks of war, including "all consequences of hostilities or warlike operations whether before or after declaration of war," but that ordinary sea risks should remain for the account of the owners. After the Armistice the collier was employed in carrying coal for minesweepers, which, in coming alongside, bumped against the collier & damaged her.—Held: in the circumstances the coaling of the minesweepers was not a warlike operation, & the owners could not claim against the Admlty.—ADMIRALTY COMRS. v. BRYNAWEL S.S. 8757. —— —— Negligence of requisitioned ship.]—During the war a steamship which was on sub-time charter was requisitioned by the Govt. on the terms of the charterparty T.99. While so requisitioned the steamship was injured by collision with another steamer in circumstances which were alleged to constitute a warlike operation. Damages were claimed against the Crown in an arbn. both by the shipowners & by the sub-time charterers, the claim being based on s. 19 of T.99, but the Crown refused to pay on the ground that the shipowners were not a party to the contract, & could have claimed under Indemnity Act, 1920 (c. 48), & the sub-time charterers had not the steamer at their risk. Upon argument of a special case:—Held: (1) on the facts the damage occurred in the course of a warlike operation; (2) the Indemnity Act, 1920 (c. 43), did not apply to arbn. proceedings; (3) as the Crown had contracted with the sub-time charterers they must pay the sub-time charterers.—EAGLE OIL TRANSPORT CO., LTD. v. BOARD OF TRADE (1925), 42 T. 8759. —— —— —— Assessment of damages recoverable from Crown.]—The steamship Warilda was taken over during the war by the Admlty. on the terms of charterparty T.99 for use as an ambulance transport. Whilst carrying wounded soldiers from Havre to Southampton the Warilda came into collision with another ship, & both ships were damaged. In an action arising out of the collision it was held that the collision was caused by the negligence of the master of the Warilda, & that the Warilda was liable to the other ship for damages. Charterparty T.99 provided (clause 19) that the Admlty. would take over war risks excluded from an ordinary marine policy by the f.c. & s. clause, which included all consequences of hostilities or warlike operations, & (clause 25) that if from deficiency of men or store breakdown of machinery, "or any other cause," the work of the steamer was at any time suspended, pay should cease for the whole of the period during which the vessel was inefficient. It was agreed that an ordinary marine policy incorporated the Institute Time Clauses, including the running down clause, which provided that, if the insured ship became liable to pay & paid damages to another ship in respect of a collision, the insurers would pay to the assured three-fourths of the sum so paid, & would also, if the liability of the insured ship had been contested with the consent of the insurers, pay a like proportion of the costs thereby incurred. Upon a petition of right by the owners of the Warilda, it was held by the House of Lords that the collision was a consequence of a warlike operation, & that the owners were entitled to recover from the Crown such sum as should be found due to them by the judge of the Commercial Ct. Upon the assessment of damages the owners of the Warilda claimed (inter alia) (a) three-fourths of the sum which they had been held liable to pay in the collision action; (b) three-fourths of the costs of defending that action; (c) compensation for loss of hire during the period when the Warilda was undergoing repair:—Held: (1) the liability undertaken by the running down clause was not a risk which would be excluded by the f.c. & s. clause, & the Crown was not liable to indemnify the Warilda wholly or in part against the liability which she had incurred to third parties in consequence of the negligence of her master; (2) the claim for costs failed, as the Crown had not consented to the liability of the Warilda being contested; (3) the claim for loss of hire was excluded by clause 25 of the charterparty & was not recoverable under clause 19.—ADELAIDE S.S. 8760. —— —— After cessation of hostilities.]—During the war a steamer belonging to applts. was requisitioned by the Shipping Controller under a charterparty providing that the Crown should be liable for all consequences of warlike operations but that the owners were to bear the marine risks. After the Armistice the steamer, when still under requisition, was on a voyage with a mercantile cargo of oats & collided at night with another steamer which had been requisitioned by the United States Govt. & which was taking mines back to America, probably in the belief that they were no longer required for the purposes of the war. The collision was caused by the negligent navigation of both steamers, & applts.' steamer was off hire for ninety-nine days as the result of the damage which she suffered. An arbn. took place, & the arbitrator found that the collision was a consequence of warlike operations & that therefore the Crown was liable to compensate applts.:—Held: (1) there was evidence on which the arbitrator could find that the steamer requisitioned by the United States Govt. was at the time of the collision performing a warlike operation; (2) the fact that the negligent navigation of applts.' steamer contributed equally to the loss did not relieve the Crown from liability: & therefore the arbitrator's award must be affi med.—Re HAIN S.S. 8761. —— Ship torpedoed—Subsequent loss by storm.]—The Admlty. requisitioned a ship on condition that they would pay for the loss of the ship if it was excluded from an ordinary marine policy with the f.c. & s. clause. The ship was torpedoed & was towed some distance but ultimately was driven ashore by a storm & became a total wreck:—Held: as the storm would not have caused the loss of the ship if she had not been torpedoed, the loss was excluded from a marine policy & fell on the Admlty.—LOBITOS OIL FIELDS, LTD. v. ADMIRALTY COMRS. (1918), 34 T. L. R. 466, D. C.

8762. —— Salvage services—Ship being driven towards minefields.]—The Lords Comrs. of the Admlty. requisitioned a steamship upon the terms of a charterparty, which provided that they should not be liable for any cause arising as a sea risk, but that the risks of war which were taken by them were those excluded by the following clause: "Warranted free of capture, seizure, & detention, & the consequences thereof . . . & also from all consequences of hostilities or warlike operations." On a voyage in the North Sea under this charter, while she was between two minefields, the vessel broke her propeller shaft in a gale of wind, & was being driven disabled towards one of the minefields six miles distant. Salvage services were rendered, & she was eventually towed into port. The owners paid one sum of £3,000, admittedly a fair sum, in settlement of a claim for salvage. The question whether the Admlty. should contribute towards this sum was referred to arbn. The arbitrator found that the vessel, besides being exposed to ordinary sea perils, was in danger of drifting on to a minefield; that the master accepted the salvage services to save the ship from both marine & war risks, the consequences of hostilities & warlike operations within the meaning of the charterparty; that £750 out of the £3,000 represented the sum by which the salvage reward was enhanced by reason of war risks & that £750 was a reasonable sum for the owners to have paid for rescuing their vessel from those risks. He awarded that the Admlty., as charterers, were liable to pay that sum:—Held: the £750, being the amount of salvage occasioned by the consequences of hostilities or warlike operations, was a loss from those causes, & payable as such by the Admlty. within the express terms of the charter.—PYMAN S.S. Co. v. ADMIRALTY COMRS., [1919] 1 K. B. 49; 88 L. J. K. B. 277; 119 L. T. 735; 35 T. L. R. 79; 14 Asp. M. L. C. 364, C. A.

8763. —— Stranding — Navigation without lights.]—The steamship Inkonka was chartered by the Admlty. on the terms of the charterparty T.99. under which the Admlty. were not liable for losses from ordinary marine risks, but undertook the risks of "all consequences of hostilities or warlike operations." The Inkonka sailed under Admlty. orders on a voyage from Salonica to Taranto, in Italy, having on board hospital stores for the British Government, & carrying a few British troops & officers. On approaching Taranto she was navigated without lights, being in the war zone, & was escorted by a British destroyer. No shore lights were to be seen, & the Inkonka was ordered by the commander of the destroyer to follow a pilot escort which came out of Taranto. She did so, though the master would not have attempted, without the destroyer's orders, to enter the port, & he only sought to do so in the darkness in reliance on the pilot escort. The Inkonka almost immediately after she was ordered to follow the pilot escort lost sight of her & ran ashore:—Held: though the Inkonka was stranded whilst being navigated under war conditions, the damage to her did not arise in consequence of warlike operations, & the Admlty. were not liable in damages for the loss.—HARRISONS, LTD. v. SHIPPING CONTROLLER, [1921] 1 K. 8764. Act of King's enemies—Ship requisitioned for military purposes—Used as storehouse for provisions.]—Goods were shipped from Australia to the United Kingdom on board a ship requisitioned by the Crown for military purposes, under a bill of lading which described the ship as "bound for London via ports subject to Govt. requirements" & contained an exception under which the Crown was not liable if the cargo was lost by the act of the King's enemies, & also very wide powers of deviation under orders or directions of the Govt.

On arriving in the Mediterranean the ship was ordered to a port out of the direct route to her destination in order to land frozen meat for the use of troops, & was detained there for a considerable time while the meat which she had on board, & other frozen meat which was put on board her, was landed as required by the troops. On her way from this port to her destination she was sunk by a hostile ship, & the goods were lost:—Held: that the use of the ship as a storeship for meat was not within the intent & object of the contract, & the Crown was not protected by the exception in the bill of lading.—A.-G. v. SMITH BENJAMIN) & Co. It is a question of the balance of testimony, of weighing testimony by certain known principles by which all questions of fact are weighed & considered in cts. of law, & although I myself should place considerable reliance on expert opinion with respect to technical manœuvres or something which had reference to what was or was not to be done for the purpose of avoiding some impending accident

8789. —— Assessors reasons not satisfactory.]—In invoking the assistance of the Trinity Masters the ct. merely requests them to state their opinions together with the reasons on which that opinion is founded, & if the opinion of the Trinity Masters is not satisfactory, the ct. does not adopt it (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE ALFRED (1850), 3 Wm. Rob. 232; 7 Notes of Cases, 352; 14 Jur. 155; 166 E. R. 949.

SECT. 3.—FUNCTIONS OF ASSESSORS.

8791. As expert advisers—Unusual accident.]—An allegation that a collision was caused by the chains or any part of the furniture of a vessel getting out of order by accident, without the intervention of storms, & when the ship was sailing down the Thames with a fair wind, can never be considered by the ct. to be a good defence, unless so advised by the Trinity Masters (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE CLUTHA (1846), 4 L. T. 774.

mariners, & adopted as his own their opinion, based on a consideration of conflicting testimony, as to the responsibility for the collision:—Held: this was a delegation of the judicial functions; & a new trial was ordered.—WRIGHT v. COLLIER (1892), 19 A. R. 298.—CAN.

PART XXVI. SECT. 3.

n. To comment on trustworthiness of evidence.]—Two ships collided on a very bad night. The collision was caused by the Magnus, which was light, dragging her anchors, & coming down on the Rossetti, which was holding to her moorings. When the Magnus was dragging her anchors she had steam up but did not use it, by which failure she omitted to take a reasonable measure which might have avoided the accident. In an action for damages by the Rossetti against the Magnus there was uncontradicted evidence to the effect that the steam had not been used because those in charge of the Magnus did not & could not know owing to the darkness & the weather that they were dragging their anchors. The Lord Ordinary, without expressing any opinion as to whether he credited that evidence or not, accepted an opinion expressed by the nautical assessor to the effect that it would not have been difficult for those on the Magnus to know that they were dragging their anchors:—Held: it was for the Lord Ordinary & not for the nautical assessor to pronounce upon the trustworthiness of that evidence, & to say whether or not the master of the Magnus ought to have known when his anchor began to drag, &, on the ground that the evidence did not establish the fault, the Magnus assoilzied.—CAMBO SHIPPING CO., LTD. v. DAMPSKIBSSELSKABET CARL OF COPENHAGEN, [1920] S. C. 26; 57 Sc. L. R. 59; [1919] 2 S. L. T. 224.—SCOT.

other nautical persons, however respectable or numerous such witnesses may be, swearing to a belief that this or that particular course was the proper course to have been adopted. If this were not so, your attendance in this ct. would be almost nugatory, & in the great majority of cases that might occur it would be impossible for the ct. to arrive at any certain or satisfactory determination (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE GAZELLE (1842), 1 Wm. Rob. 471; 2 Notes of Cases, 39; 7 Jur. 497; 166 E. R. 648.

8795. ——.]—It is true there may be cases where it may be desirable to have the affidavits of persons of great local knowledge, to instruct the mind of the ct. when Trinity Masters do not attend; when they do attend, all evidence of that kind is superseded by a reference to their opinion, because they are guided by their own knowledge & judgment (DR. LUSHINGTON).—THE NIMROD (1850), 7 Notes of Cases, 570; 14 Jur. 942.

8796. ——.]—THE MAGDALEN, No. 7486, ante.

8797. ——.]—Where the ct. is assisted by nautical assessors evidence of experts on questions of nautical science & skill may properly be rejected.—THE SIR ROBERT PEEL (1880), 43 L. T. 364; 4 Asp. M. L. C. 321, C. A.

8798. ——.]—It [the evidence in question] is evidence on a point on which it is the province of the Trinity Masters to advise the ct., & I do not think I ought to do anything which will go any way towards allowing the examination of expert witnesses on questions of nautical skill & seamanship in cases where the ct. is assisted by the Trinity Masters (SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE).—THE KIRBY HALL (1883), 8 P.
